BOSTON THANKS THE AMERICAN FOR BRINGING GRAND TRUNK

Resolutions strongly urging the Legislature to expedite the coming of the Grand Trunk to Boston and thanking the AMERICAN for its work in bringing the Grand Trunk to this port were unanimously adopted by the City Council at a special session in the City Hall yesterday afternoon. The resolutions were offered by Councillor Daniel J. McDonald. The resolutions read as follows:

WHEREAS, the Grand Trunk Railroad has petitioned for the right to enter the port of Boston;

WHEREAS, the entrance of this railroad will mark a distinct step in the commercial development of the city; and

WHEREAS, the establishment of this new route to the West will mean the employment for thousands of citizens of this city; therefore, be it

RESOLVED, THAT WE, THE CITY COUNCIL OF BOSTON, IN MEETING ASSEMBLED, EXTEND OUR THANKS TO THE BOSTON AMERICAN FOR ITS SUCCESSFUL EFFORTS IN MOULDING PUBLIC INTEREST TO THE IMPORTANCE OF BRINGING ANOTHER RAILROAD TO BOSTON AND ITS PERSISTENT FIGHT TO ACCOMPLISH THIS END; be it further

RESOLVED, That we urge the General Court of Massachusetts to expedite the introduction of the Grand Trunk Railroad to Boston by favorable action on the company's petition as speedily as the public welfare will permit.

F. J. LINEHAN IS CAUGHT IN NEW ORLEANS

Former State Senator Arrested for Boston Police for City Lumber Frauds.

ALIAS OF F. J. SPENCER

FRANK J. Linehan, former State Senator and member of the Boston Board of Aldermen, indicted for larceny and forgery in connection with city lumber frauds, and who disappeared some weeks ago when he was to appear for trial, was arrested last night in New Orleans, according to a dispatch received from there by Deputy Superintendent of Police Watts.

After the disappearance of Linehan, who sacrificed his bail of $5,000, the Boston police obtained information that led them to believe that he had gone to Chili, South America.

Later the police traced him to Panama and from there echoes of the fugitive came from Colon. Chief Watts, bound to arrest Linehan, next heard from him at New Orleans. The information was that Linehan was living under the name of F. J. Spencer.

New Orleans Acts Quickly.

Chief Watts yesterday wired Chief of Police John C. Reynolds of New Orleans that Linehan was in his city and asked that he be apprehended. Last night Chief Watts was gratified to receive this laconic message:

New Orleans, Jan. 20, '12.
William B. Watts,
Boston.
Linehan under arrest.
JOHN C. REYNOLDS,
Chief of Police.

Chief Watts was all smiles when he gave the information to the newspaper men at Police Headquarters.

"We have been on Linehan's track," said Chief Watts, "practically since he left Boston, skipping his bail. It was only a matter of time until we got him. He'll be brought back immediately."

A reward of $500 was offered for the arrest of Linehan, and this amount of money will probably go to the New Orleans Chief of Police. The reward was offered by Joseph Scholl, of No. 229 Walnut street, Chelsea, one of Linehan's bondsmen, who pledged security to the amount of $5,000 for the appearance in court of the former Senator.

Vahey Is Notified.

James H. Vahey, who was counsel for Linehan, was informed last night over the telephone, of the capture in New Orleans of Linehan.

"This is the first I heard of it," he said. "I do not care to make a statement at this time."

"Are you still counsel for Linehan?" he was asked.

"I am."

"Will you represent Linehan in court?"

"Yes. I do not care to say anything further at this time."

Linehan was active in politics in South Boston for many years. He served three terms in the Common Council from Ward 13 in 1899-1902. In 1905 and 1909 he served as alderman from the same ward. He was representative in the General Court from Ward 13 during the years 1903 and 1904.

He was elected to the State Senate in 1907, and served on the Committee on Drainage and on the Committee on Mercantile Affairs of the Senate. He represented Wards 13, 14, 15 and 16 in the Senate, defeating C. H. S. Robinson, the Republican candidate, by a vote of 9,407 to 2,854.

During his public career he had many stormy encounters with his fellow legislators, both in the City Council and at the State House.

Cold Proposition, the "C. C. C. S. Co."

But We Are Quite Willing to Be the Goat, so What's the Answer?

The following interesting and don't you think cute little letter was received in the mail last night:

January 19, 1912.

The Boston AMERICAN:
Business Manager.

Dear Sir—We represent the Cape Cod Cold Storage Company, a corporation organized under the laws of Massachusetts, with place of business at Provincetown, Mass., and also Edwin N. Paine, Joshua Paine, William H. Young, John Adams, Frederick A. Fisher and George R. Bliss, sometime officers or agents of said corporation.

We have just learned that you contemplate publishing in your paper some articles or statements purporting to be facts which are untrue and which if published may be a great injury to all the above and others; and, in behalf of the above and ourselves individually as attorneys as aforesaid, we hereby request you to publish no statements about the said corporation and the said persons or the promotion and organization of the corporation and its business, and that we and all the above will hold you, your paper and the proprietor thereof strictly responsible for all loss, damages, costs and expenses arising from any such publication; that NONE OF THE AFFAIRS OF SAID CORPORATION ARE OF PUBLIC INTEREST AND THE FACTS CONCERNING ITS PROMOTION AND ORGANIZATION ARE NOT IN ANY WAY PRIVILEGED.

Yours respectfully,
ADAMS & BLISS.

Smothering the cynical suggestion that somebody may be working this newspaper for a free reading notice, we are willing to be the goat and ask Messrs. Adams & Bliss what is the Cape Cod Cold Storage Company, and, if the C. C. C. S. Co., is in the c. s. business, exactly why its affairs are not of "public interest."

The Boston AMERICAN, moreover, will be glad to hear in confidence from any of its readers regarding the Cape Cod Cold Storage Company.

What about it? Do you know? The AMERICAN will be glad to hear the particulars. Write to the Cold Storage Editor, Boston AMERICAN, No. 89 Summer street.

BIG STICK IN CHINA!

Roosevelt Now Suggested for President of the Republic.

NEW YORK, Jan. 20.—That Theodore Roosevelt should be asked to assume the temporary presidency of the new Chinese republic, was the startling suggestion made by Dr. Toyokishi Ivenaga, professor of political science in Chicago University in an address to-day before the civic forum in the Hudson Theatre.

"The people of China are not ready for a republic," said the lecturer. "They have lived under a monarchy for 4,000 years, and their progress under a new regime will necessarily have to be slow.

"Startling as might seem the statement," said the speaker, "the best plan for China under the circumstances would be, I am strongly attempted to suggest, to ask Mr. Roosevelt to serve as a temporary President of China and let him with his powerful big stick, whip the people into one strong united nation."

RICHESON CALMLY HEARS PHELPS' DOOM

Hears News From Lawyer Morse Without Emotion; "Sorry for Poor Phelps."

SEES PROFESSOR TO-DAY

Clarence A. T. Richeson was informed last evening by Attorney William A. Morse in his cell at the Charles street jail that Silas N. Phelps had lost his fight for commutation and must die.

Although the doomed Virginian had expected that Phelps would get off with life imprisonment and that such a decision in the case of the mill operative and woodsman would help him escape the electric chair, he did not collapse nor make a scene.

He simply sat still for a few moments, his fingers locked, glueing into the eyes of his counsel, and then, in measured tones, said:

"I'm heartily sorry for poor Phelps, as I am for every man in trouble."

"He Will Not Falter."

"Mr. Richeson did not accept the news as appears to his own case," said Mr. Morse at the close of the interview. "I explained that he should not, as every case must stand upon its own merits, and he agreed with me.

"His sympathy for Phelps was almost reverent. Let me tell you that it things go different than we want, Mr. Richeson is going to meet his fate like a man. I am assured of that. He will not falter.

"He will face it calmly and resolutely if we fail. Poor fellow. There is never a time that I sit and chat with him that I don't leave with a heavy heart. There is a lot the public doesn't know. But we haven't given up hope yet, by a good deal.

"We are going right ahead as if there hadn't been any Phelps case. We shall have a petition of our own, backed up by evidence which we think will have lots of weight. There is no great hurry about filing it.

Heard News Calmly.

"Any talk about Mr. Richeson being a wreck and in collapse are absurd. He was as calm this evening, as I talked with him, as I am this minute. He is as well as a man could be under the circumstances.

"No, the two Baptist clergymen did not visit him to-day as arranged. One clergyman will visit him Sunday and a few others may later, but nothing definite has been agreed upon in that respect. I expect Mr. Lee to return to Boston about the first of February."

Frederick Lincoln Anderson, professor of Biblical interpretation at the Newton Theological Institution, will visit Richeson in his cell to-day. Professor Anderson had to get not only permission to enter the jail but a special permit to make the visit on the Sabbath, when only physicians are allowed to visit prisoners in cases of emergency.

Dr. Anderson has been anxious to talk with Richeson ever since his arrest. He wishes to console his former student and to assure him that there are those who stand ready to do all they can for him. Professor Anderson arranged for the visit through Attorney Morse.

The interview which Attorney Morse held with Richeson last evening was the most momentous since his arrest. Governor Foss's failure to induce the Executive Council to reduce Phelps's sentence to life imprisonment changed the complexion of Richeson's case and rendered his chances practically hopeless. Public opinion says Phelps's defeat was virtually a decision in the Richeson case.

All outside food is now refused Richeson, and he is closely guarded to prevent suicide.

Brown Issues Loan Licenses.

E. Gerry Brown of Brockton, supervisor of small loans, will begin issuing licenses under the new small-loan broker law tomorrow, bringing to a successful conclusion the protest by the Sunday AMERICAN several months ago against money lenders' methods. Still further limitation of loan evils is found in the section of the law limiting the power of any broker to charge more than 3 per cent. interest a month on loans of $300 or under, whatever the nature of the security.

Mrs. L. A. Shaw Lives in Camp Nurses Her Invalid Husband

MR. AND MRS. L. AGASSIZ SHAW, WHO LIVE IN CAMP

This picture of the Shaws was taken at the Brookline Country Club just before they were married. He is now an invalid and she is nursing him at their camp in the Adirondacks.

She Returned Home to Attend the Wedding of Her Sister, to Governor Bass

Boston society people learned yesterday afternoon for the first time that Mrs. Louis Agassiz Shaw, who as the beautiful eighteen-year-old Joan Bird was one of the belles of Boston society, is living in a camp with her husband in the Adirondack mountains, helping him in his fight for life against tuberculosis. Mrs. Shaw has given up society, friends and amusements of all kinds to nurse her husband.

Louis Agassiz Shaw is the youngest heir to the $30,000,000 Shaw family fortune, largest of those founded by the Calumet & Hecla mines.

Mrs. Shaw had but a fleeting glimpse of the gay world before she shut herself off so completely from all its glory and glamour, for she was a bride almost as soon as she was a bud. Mr. Shaw is the son of the late Louis Agassiz Shaw and Mary Saltonstall Shaw (now Mrs. John S. Curtis) and a grandson of Quincy A. Shaw. He is a nephew of Alexander Agassiz, the famous naturalist.

A Prominent Clubman.

He is a member of the Porcellian, Somerset and other prominent clubs, an ardent polo player and a member of the Dedham Polo Club. He was educated at St. Mark's School, Southboro, and at Harvard University. His wedding to Miss Bird was at the beautiful Bird estate in East Walpole, on June 15, 1910. Ten months later a daughter was born, and practically ever since the young couple have isolated themselves in the Adirondacks.

Mrs. Shaw made her reappearance in society for the first time in several months at her sister's marriage to Governor Bass of New Hampshire, yesterday, at the Bird home in East Walpole, but Mr. Shaw, who is said to be failing constantly, was unable to accompany her.

They are there with their little daughter and the retinue of servants, far away from the world they both loved so dearly, she refusing to leave her husband for an instant save on an especial occasion such as that of yesterday.

Younger Daughter of the Birds.

Mrs. Shaw is the younger daughter of the Birds. She is handsome as well as exceedingly clever. She has run the gamut of popularity and has assisted at Vincent Club functions until her name is quite inseparable from that well-known organization. She is one of the most daring riders of her set and is prominent in the Norfolk Hunt Club as well as the organizer of that exclusive hunting club, known as the "Endless Bengles."

But now she only hears faint echoes of all the functions in which she formerly was the central figure. Letters and occasional visits from her friends make the only ripple in the calm of her existence.

AMERICAN'S VICTORY IN FIGHT FOR NEW ROAD RECOGNIZED BY BOSTON CITY GOVERNMENT

Entire City and State, Councillor Daniel J. McDonald Says, Benefited Through the American's Splendid Organizing of a United Public Sentiment Which Would Not Be Circumvented

WITH the adoption yesterday by the Boston City Council of resolutions complimenting the Boston AMERICAN on its campaign to bring the Grand Trunk to Boston, and calling upon the Legislature to expedite the introduction of the road by speedy action on its petition, the last official word was spoken on the Grand Trunk question outside the halls of legislation.

The resolutions expressing the thanks of the city to this newspaper were adopted by unanimous vote. Their author, Councillor Daniel J. McDonald, said so many nice things about the AMERICAN and its Grand Trunk campaign that on any day except Sunday the AMERICAN might be blushing red ink.

"I feel," Councillor McDonald said, "that it is only proper that we should officially commend such journalistic activity. There is no doubt that the publicity and the widespread interest that brought about the invitations to this road to come to Boston were in a large part due to the persistency and the sincerity of the powerful campaign waged by the Boston AMERICAN. It was a 'newspaper with a mission,' and all Boston should feel glad at the outcome of its successful fight.

GREAT STIMULUS TO BUSINESS.

"Personally I think the entry of the Grand Trunk to Boston will be a great stimulation to business. It opens up new fields for Boston products, particularly in the Winter months, and looking at it purely from the humanitarian side—the work which it will give to hundreds of our citizens—it is certainly desirable. Competition in railroads will benefit the commuter and, as in every other line of business, produce a healthy situation.

"Some three months ago this Council passed resolutions in conjunction with the Chamber of Commerce and the Massachusetts Legislature inviting the Grand Trunk to come to Boston. I think we should let the General Court know our feelings, now that the railroad is knocking at the door.

"We do not want any red tape to block favorable action upon this petition. The Legislature has invited the Grand Trunk to come to Boston. Now that they have accepted the invitation to come, let us make them welcome. Let us show by speedy action that the people of Boston endorse heartily anything that will benefit their city and that the invitation was sincerely meant!"

President Walter Collins put the resolutions before the Council and they were unanimously passed. They read as follows:

Whereas, the Grand Trunk Railroad has petitioned for the right to enter the port of Boston, and

Whereas, the entrance of the railroad will mark a distinct step in the commercial development of the city; and

Whereas, the establishment of this new route to the West will mean employment for thousands of citizens of this city; therefore be it

Resolved, that we, the City Council of Boston in meeting assembled, extend our thanks to the Boston American for its successful efforts in moulding public interest to the importance of bringing another railroad to Boston and its persistent fight to accomplish this end; and be it further

Resolved, that we urge the General Court of Massachusetts to expedite the introduction of the Grand Trunk Railroad to Boston by favorable action on the company's petition as speedily as the public welfare will permit.

In more ways than one yesterday was an important date in the advancement of the Boston and Grand Trunk cause. General Hugh Bancroft again went on record in favor of State ownership of all Boston docks. General Bancroft also made it plain that when the Directors of the Port suggested the other day the use of the State's credit to the amount of $50,000,000, they did not ask for an appropriation of that amount, but merely that the State guarantee an investment of that size in docks and steamship lines. It will be easy enough to get capital, General Bancroft says, with the State guaranteeing interest on the bonds. The rate, he says, cannot lose.

President George S. Smith of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, seldom or never seen in print as the author of a statement, contributes to to-day's AMERICAN his views with reference to the control of the Grand Trunk. Mr. Smith's statement, printed elsewhere, is worthy of the consideration of every reader.

Attorney-General James M. Swift yesterday said that the future of Boston depends in a large measure upon the outcome of the fight to be waged before the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington to-morrow for a change in the differential rates now in force between the ports of Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore on through freight traffic from Chicago west to foreign ports.

Attorney-General Swift left Boston last night for Washington, to appear before the Interstate Commerce Commission in behalf of the State and the Board of Directors of the Port of Boston. He has filed a complaint with the Commission setting forth that the present rates operate as a tax upon all freight going through the port of Boston and in favor of the ports of New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, resulting in the shipment of through freight largely through the other cities named, to the detriment of Boston.

A similar complaint has been filed by the City of Boston and the Boston Chamber of Commerce. Charles S. Hamlin will represent the Chamber at the hearing tomorrow.

The State and City of New York and the New York Chamber of Commerce contend in complaints filed with the Interstate Commission that the present rates operate against the port of New York and in favor of Philadelphia, Baltimore and Boston.

The complaints in every case are modout against the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Company, the Boston & Maine, Boston & Albany, New York, New Haven & Hartford and all other roads having western connections.

HEAD OF CHAMBER OF COMMERCE WANTS GRAND TRUNK HERE

President George S. Smith of the Boston Chamber of Commerce has consented to explain his position, which is that of the Boston Chamber, upon the coming of the Grand Trunk Railroad to Boston.

By GEORGE S. SMITH,
President of the Boston Chamber of Commerce.

I doubt if there are fifty men, all told, in Boston—or in Greater Boston—who are not heartily in favor of the Grand Trunk Railroad coming to Boston. At the same time, we must recognize the fact that this overwhelming majority in favor of the Grand Trunk's proposition includes a considerable number of people who favor getting the Grand Trunk the location without any adequate knowledge of what the advantages to Boston would be, and who are not actuated in the attitude they take more by prejudice against the existing railroads and a desire to have them lose the many benefits which they believe will result to Boston if the Grand Trunk builds a line to this port.

The Grand Trunk Railroad system now taps 9,000 miles and soon will tap approximately 12,000 miles of productive territory. With such a road living or terminals here and reaching this port on its own rails, it would have a direct interest in the development of this port, and a regard for the interests of its controlling business would require it to subserve and protect its own interests by increasing the business coming from this port. Until it has such an interest to serve by developing the business of this port, we cannot expect it, or any other road, to make any special effort to do so.

The record of us who have been interested in the development of this port know that one of the fundamentals is the obtaining of certain cargoes for our vessels coming here from Europe. In the millions of tons of agricultural products which will be exported from Canada through some American port, it is to be hoped, sooner rather than in any one thing, the magnet which will attract ships, large and small, to Boston, because of the absolute guaranty of return cargoes.

The result would be a tremendous stimulus to every form of business activity. Additional sailings to ports now served, and vessels plying between Boston and ports now not reached at all would follow—and the final result will be cheaper transportation for our own merchants and manufacturers and the creation of a world of new business for this port.

Benefit not to be overlooked is the confidence and assurance that would give that we are alive to our own welfare and that we are reaching out for a wider market.

Question of Terminals.

The question of terminals is to be dealt with by the directors of the port; but looking at the situation on a broad way, and without prejudice in favor to any particular section of the city, it seems to me that the terminus of the Grand Trunk should be in East Boston; and I believe that the coming of the Grand Trunk to East Boston will justify the directors of the port in starting at once upon the construction of new docks, to be an integral part of a great export terminal to be used by the Grand Trunk and other railroads entering Boston.

Nowadays we are asked to have a large and far-sighted vision. That is what I have tried to do when thinking of this matter. Not contenting ourselves with accepting what is going to happen in the next five or ten years, I do not believe that I am grading an extravagant statement when I say that the whole of New England is going to greatly develop in the next twenty years and that the population of Greater Boston—the Boston which lies within the area of 200 square miles defined by the Federal census as the Industrial District—will at least double in the next twenty years.

BANCROFT TALKS TERMINAL PLANS FOR GRAND TRUNK

Boston has promised the Grand Trunk Railroad an excellent terminal if it will extend its line to this city. Where is the terminal to be?

That's what the Board of Port Directors of Boston would like to know. They have studied the map of the harbor, and they find existing railroads own all the available terminals and all approaches to protected terminals.

The Grand Trunk Railroad cannot send its freight trains into Boston in a satisfactory terminal without crossing the tracks of one or more railroad lines, a tremendously expensive and uneconomical proceeding and one which would not be permitted by the existing roads except in return for heavy damages.

To reach the proposed terminal on Bird Island flats out only the Boston & Albany, but the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn and perhaps the Boston & Eastern would have to be crossed.

General Hugh Bancroft, chairman of the Port directors, does not believe the Grand Trunk will surely build to Boston unless the State can provide adequate waterfront terminals. He says:

"So the problem of the waterfront terminals is the only solution to the problem of providing for the Grand Trunk and other railroads which may wish to enter this port.

"The Grand Trunk Railroad wishes to enter Boston, but it wishes to operate here on equal terms with the other railroads and it does not wish to spend six more money than it can possibly help in getting terminals.

"The building of the new lines from Windsor, Vt., to Boston will tax the resources of the Canadian road, and I am sure it will not consent to spend millions constructing facilities underlying to the docks which are only useful for foreign freight purposes.

"Most people seem to think that the object of the Grand Trunk Railroad in coming to Boston is to send and receive transatlantic freight. It has also another object. It wants a share in the domestic freight of Boston, and the passenger business. Therefore, a terminal like that at Bird Island would not be well located.

"The Grand Trunk expects a satisfactory terminal for domestic and foreign business, and where is it going to find it?

"In our report of a few days ago we made certain recommendations requiring large sums of money. People erroneously jumped to the conclusion that we wished to spend this sum. That is not true. We wish the people of the State to invest it.

"The waterfront terminals of Boston are very valuable, and they are going to be more valuable. The State of Massachusetts should buy them, and lease them to a house, for a good investment. These terminals are owned at present by railroads that would be very glad to pay 3½ per cent for using them if the State took them over. The State can get capital for 3½ per cent. Money costs the railroads nearer 4½ per cent.

"With the State owning the East Boston terminals there is nothing to prevent the Grand Trunk from coming right into the existing docks at East Boston without crossing other lines or at more than reasonable expense. The Grand Trunk will be glad to pay a reasonable rent for its use of the terminals, and here is a profit already.

STRIKE-BREAKERS CLASH WITH BOYS

Pelted With Ice, Dock Workers Engage In a Lively Mixup.

Forty strikebreakers from the steamship Barcelona at the Hoosac Tunnel docks, armed with cotton hooks and small hatchets, started a small-sized riot when pelted with ice by a gang of boys on Water street, Charlestown, last night.

Andrew Murphy, an assistant weigher in the employ of the Federal government at the docks, was attacked by the strikebreakers as he passed along Water street on his way home from work, although he had no way responsible for the trouble with the boys.

One of the strike-breakers struck at Murphy with a cotton hook, narrowly missing his head, ripping his clothing, while another pursued him with a small hatchet. He escaped through the excited crowd, only to be beaten by an unidentified man further up the street.

Big Crowd Gathers.

Two other innocent onlookers who chanced to be in the neighborhood, neither of whom would give his name, also were roughly handled by the excited "breakers" immediately following this trouble on Water street, attracted to the spot by the cry that a riot was on, a crowd of from 700 to 800 excited men gathered on the bridge leading into City square and for a while matters were so threatening there would be a still more serious outbreak.

The timely appearance of five policemen from the Sullivan square station, almost all of whom had been posted along the waterfront in anticipation of trouble, calmed the excited crowd, however, and the mob was dispersed without further difficulty.

Protest to O'Meara.

No arrests were made, it being impossible to pick out the particular strikebreaker who started the trouble, the boys having disappeared in the meantime. But the police officers present as well as the people at the nearby Boston & Maine freight office were unanimous in declaring the striking longshoremen were not concerned in the affair.

While the trouble was at its height, added excitement resulted from the sudden appearance of an ambulance from the City Hospital, called to care for a strikebreaker named Angelo Serafil, who had been injured by a bale of rags falling on him while unloading the Anglian at a nearby wharf a few minutes before.

It was not until the crowd had been assured that no one had been killed, and that this man's injuries did not come out of the mix-up on Water street, that the excitement broke that has marked the longshoremen's strike up to this time was relieved.

Previous to the ice-throwing episode, and the fight that followed, Police Commissioner O'Meara had been waited on by a committee from the Longshoremen's Trade Council and requested to issue orders compelling the strikebreakers to refrain from going from other cities from marching through the streets with cotton hooks on their shoulders in an endeavor to stir up trouble.

Commissioner O'Meara's attention was called to the fact that, however law-abiding the longshoremen themselves might be, the sympathizers of the strike were not responsible for the unnecessary marching of armed strikebreakers through the streets.

Will Continue Strike.

His private secretary, in the absence of Commissioner O'Meara himself, assured the men's committee that the matter would be looked into, while at the same time pointing out that, however, in a peaceful manner in which their strike was conducted up to that time.

By unanimous vote of the Council at Rochdale building last night it was decided to continue their strike for higher wages until success crowns their efforts.

The statement said to have emanated from the steamship Barcelona in which it was asserted that the longshoremen were willing to settle their strike if given New York prices, was declared to be absolutely unfounded.

"We are still sticking out for our original demands, and have no intention of compromising this strike in any way," was the official declaration of the committee.

Work for 200 Men.

The men's committee also said that the claim advanced by the steamship agents concerning the number of work being accomplished by the imported strike-breakers was absurd.

It was learned late last night that a Boston business house had approached the Boston agents of the strike-breakers with an offer to furnish employment to 200 of their number to go to work all over the country.

This offer carried with it an assurance that the 200 men in question would be given a wage higher than that received by the average longshoreman in Boston previous to their strike, in addition to being housed and fed at the employer's expense. The offer was accepted, and the men will leave for their new place of employment to-morrow morning.

ATTRIDGE SAID TO HAVE FOUR VOTES

One More Is Necessary to Make Him Chairman of Boston City Council.

One vote is all that appears to separate Councilman John J. Attridge from the presidency of the Boston City Council for 1912. The Ward 9 Councilman is said to have four votes, and one more will give him the chairman's seat.

Those who are credited with being pledged to Attridge are Councilmen McDonald and Collins. Councilman-elect Coulthurst has said he will vote for the candidate for chairman who is first to receive four votes. Attridge will vote for himself and confidently expects to land another vote on which will give him the ballot of Coulthurst and the job.

There are others who have ambitions to be chairman, however, and there is a possibility of the council being deadlocked because of that fact. Councilman Ballantine, while not seeking the honor, is not averse to taking it. Councilman Cantwell would also preside over the council another year and Councilman Hale is said to have ambitions to wield the gavel.

GOOD REPORTS READ.

New England Club of Delta Upsilon in Annual Meeting.

Good fellowship prevailed at the annual banquet of the New England Club of Delta Upsilon, which was held last night at the Boston City Club. The reports of the secretary and treasurer were highly favorable. The officers of the past year were re-elected, and following the speakers were James L. Barton, John A. Macy and Joseph Walker. The officers are: President, William S. Tenney; vice-president, Edward J. W. Cowles; treasurer, Nathan A. Tufts; secretary, R. Sidney Bowen.

WOMEN WIN IN NORWAY.

To Be Admitted to Public Offices Equally with Man.

CHRISTIANIA, Norway, Jan. 20.—A law admitting women to all public offices on the same conditions as men was voted during the sitting of the Storthing. Exceptions, however, are made in regard to members of the Cabinet and ecclesiastic, military, diplomatic and consular officials. The new law governing it has been signed W. Johannessen, vice-consul at Bilbao, Spain, in the secretary of the legation at Washington.

GOOD TEETH FOR EVERYONE

How Decayed Teeth and Missing Ones Are Made Perfect and Natural.

Wonders can now be accomplished in dentistry. By modern methods decayed roots can be built up so as to escape detection; missing teeth can be inserted without the use of partial plates, loose ones can be tightened and teeth put in perfect condition. How this is done without pain and at a reasonable cost is fully explained in a book which the G. Gordon Martin Co. (Dentists), 420 Boylston street, Boston, are sending upon receipt of 2c. stamp. Write for it if you need any kind of dentistry. The way the work is done will be a revelation to you. Patents protecting this method make it impossible to have this work done anywhere except at the office mentioned above.

SAVED FROM DANGEROUS OPERATION—NEIGHBOR ADVISED WHAT TO DO FOR BLADDER TROUBLE.

I, too, wish to add my testimonial to the thousands you no doubt have, and will tell you what your great medicine did for me.

Several months ago I was taken very sick with bladder trouble, had intense pains and suffered greatly, at times I could not stand on my feet or sit in a chair and often was forced to cry out with pain.

I consulted two doctors, who gave me different kinds of medicine, which did me no good. It seemed as though the more of their medicine I took, the worse I became. The doctors seemed to be greatly puzzled over my case, and after holding a consultation, I was told that I had a severe case of inflammation of the bladder and an operation was very necessary.

I was being prepared to be taken to the hospital, when a neighbor came to my house and said, "Why don't you try a bottle of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root." I was willing to try anything to get relief from my suffering. My wife bought a bottle of your medicine which I began taking and soon noticed a change for the better. I continued taking it and got better right along, my appetite returned and I was able to resume work.

I have used about fourteen bottles of Swamp-Root and know that had I not taken it, I would have been operated on, and perhaps never recovered. I never fail to tell my friends about Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root as I know it will save many people from suffering and perhaps, as in my case, a dangerous operation.

Yours gratefully,
SAMUEL WILSON,

GOVERNOR BASS AND MISS BIRD MARRIED

Brilliant Ceremony at 'Endean,' Home of Bride's Parents, at East Walpole.

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

In the beautiful music room of the Charles S. Bird country home, "Endean," at East Walpole yesterday afternoon, was solemnized the most brilliant wedding of the year, when the distinguished young Governor, Robert Perkins Bass of New Hampshire, took as his bride, Miss Edith Bird, renowned for her beauty and her darling personality.

The music room, which is done in King's blue, white and gold, was filled to its capacity with beautifully gowned guests, representing the most exclusive sets of Boston, New York and New Hampshire. At the far end of the room was an improvised altar of roses and white lilacs, while the aisle through which the bridal party made their way to the altar was marked by tall marble vases with white lilacs and pink roses.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. James Thompson, rector of the Epiphany Church of Walpole, assisted by Bishop E. E. Parker of New Hampshire.

Vested Choir Sings.

Mr. Snow of the Church of the Advent was organist. The vested choir of that church, composed of twenty-six members, preceded the bridal couple to the altar singing "The Voice that Breathed O'er Eden." Then came the ushers, the matron of honor and last of all the tall, slender white-robed bride. She was escorted to the altar by her father, who later gave her in marriage. Her gown was of plain white satin with yoke and sleeves of Limerick lace, draped with white chiffon and her enveloping veil was also of Limerick lace.

Her only attendant was her sister, Mrs. Louis Angell Shaw Sloan Bird, a second marriage two years ago the bride acted in a similar capacity.

Mrs. Shaw resembled nothing more than a picture of a quaint Greek goddess. Her dark hair was done in Grecian style, and her gown of cream velvet was draped in Greek fashion, with bands of cut steel and brilliants binding it rather than trimming it, and flowing sleeves of cream chiffon reaching to the hem.

John F. Dees of Chicago, the former war correspondent and brother of the bridegroom, was best man.

The ushers included members of Governor Bass's staff, Francis W. Bird, Charles S. Bird, Jr., George Dutton and Percy H. Clark.

Simplicity the Keynote.

Simplicity was the keynote of the whole affair. At the conclusion of the ceremony a reception was held in the beautifully decorated drawing room, where the bride and groom were assisted in receiving by Mr. and Mrs. Bird, Mrs. Shaw and Miss Child, an aunt of the bride.

The Governor and his bride started shortly afterward on a two-weeks' tour, at the conclusion of which they will occupy the large house which Governor Bass has taken in Concord, N. H.

Mrs. Bird, mother of the bride, was regal in her gown of lavender satin and chiffon, while Mrs. Bass, mother of the bridegroom, wore deepest purple satin and a large hat to match. Miss Child was in black satin and chiffon.

MAUDE G. WOOLSON

Miss Woolson will become the bride of William H. Macurda of New Rochelle, N. Y. They first met at a college function.

COLLEGE ROMANCE TO END SOON IN WEDDING

Miss Woolson of Wellington Will Become Bride of New Rochelle Man.

A college romance is soon to end in the marriage of Miss Maud Genevieve Woolson, of Wellington, graduate of Smith College in the class of 1910, to William Hayward Macurda of New Rochelle, N. Y., who graduated from Princeton last June.

The announcement of the coming wedding was made yesterday afternoon by Mr. and Mrs. Harry H. Woolson, parents of the bride-to-be.

Friends of the young couple are delighted. It wasn't a surprise though, they say. Miss Woolson first met Mr. Macurda at a college function and after that they were together most at hops and functions and athletics events. Both are popular.

Old-Time Coffee Party.

St. Mary's Parish, Dedham, will hold an old-fashioned coffee party Friday evening. Many old-time features are promised by the committee in charge.

WILLIAM H. DEXTER DIES IN WORCESTER

Philanthropist and Founder of First Fire Insurance Company in Country.

WORCESTER, Jan. 20.—William H. Dexter, millionaire philanthropist and originator of the first fire insurance company in this country, and who has given away nearly half a million of dollars to churches, Worcester Academy and the town of Charlton, died to-day at his home No. 3 Charlton street with pneumonia. Mr. Dexter, who celebrated his eighty-ninth birthday on the 11th of this month, was born in the town of Charlton, January 11, 1823, and was a direct descendent of Gregory Dexter, one of the companions of Roger Williams when he founded Providence plantations in 1636.

Mr. Dexter was educated in the schools of Charlton and when about 16 years old began work as a clerk in numerous stores in Worcester and Boston, and in 1840 started in business for himself on South bridge street, selling flour, grain and groceries. Retiring from the flour and grain business in 1877, Mr. Dexter took up the real estate business, in which he was very successful.

Aided Worcester Academy.

Besides being the originator of the First National Fire Insurance Company, Mr. Dexter served as director in the company for twenty-four years and was vice-president for two years, resigning to devote his time to his real estate interests. Mr. Dexter never aspired to political office, although he served in the City Council from 1873 to 1878.

As a philanthropist and a public spirited citizen, Mr. Dexter was esteemed; his benefactions and his valuable services to the Worcester Academy as trustee and treasurer will be long remembered. His name is perpetuated at the academy by the dormitory known as Dexter hall. To the interests of the Worcester Academy he devoted nearly twenty-five years' services.

In 1892 he contributed to the government fund to purchase the site for the present postoffice building, and in all matters of public concern he was more than deeply interested and always ready to offer aid personally and financially.

Benefactor to Church.

Besides his gifts to the First Baptist Church of Worcester, which amount to almost $100,000, Mr. Dexter also gave to the town of Charlton, his birthplace, a beautiful memorial hall and soldiers' monument, valued at $225,000. About five years ago he transferred to the Worcester Academy the property at No. 3 Main street, in the heart of the business section, valued at about $75,000.

Mr. Dexter was married in 1848 to Ellen A. Foss of Livermore, Me., who died about two years ago, the only surviving relative being a niece, Mrs. John Armstrong.

Will Discuss Dressmaking.

There will be a meeting of the Vocational Counselors in the rooms of the school committee, Mason street, to-morrow at four o'clock. Dressmaking will be the subject of discussion. The speakers will be Miss May A. Allinson, assistant director of the Research Department, Women's Educational and Industrial Union; Miss Mary J. Orr, teacher of dressmaking at the Trade School for Girls; Mrs. F. E. Trafton, of Noyes Brothers; and James Snow, tailor and dressmaker.

NAVY YARD WORKERS HAVE NEW TROUBLES

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., Jan. 20.—The latest order from Secretary of the Navy Meyer has started an end of trouble in the several departments of the Navy Yards. For nearly a year, or since the Taylor and other systems of scientific management were adopted, master mechanics, quarter men and leading men found that they could not take care of the large amount of clerical work made necessary by these various systems and look after the shops. Consequently several helpers and men rated as laborers were called in from the work bench to act as clerks.

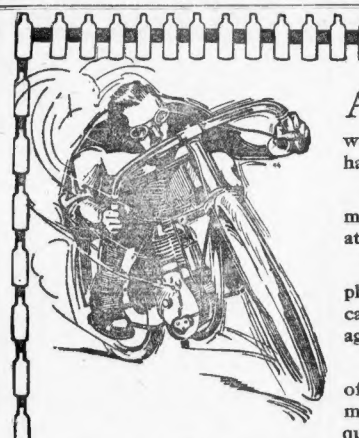
DOUBLE LEGAL STAMPS FORENOONS



ALL powerful things are dangerous in large quantities. Dynamite is of wonderful value to man, but it has to be handled in small quantities.

Chloroform is of inestimable value to mankind, but it has to be given in moderation and in small quantities.

Cocaine and opium in the hands of the physician, in moderation and where indicated, have alleviated myriads of human agonies.

Alcohol in moderate quantities is one of the greatest remedial agents known to mankind. Taken immoderately in large quantities, or constantly, it is a blight and a curse. The man or woman who through weakness and temptation can't take alcohol in moderate quantities, should never let it pass their lips.

But those who can take it moderately, frequently find it a magnificent aid to health. It tones the system when it is below normal and builds up the reserve strength, which is the body's greatest defense against disease. It aids digestion and increases the amount of nourishment assimilated by the system, thereby giving strength and endurance.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

Great Offers in Our Bedding Department

We are introducing to Boston and vicinity for the first time a decidedly new feature in the bedding business. This is the "Guaranteed Lacquer" finish on brass beds. Up to the present time no manufacturer has been able to guarantee the finish on his beds, as it was found impossible to procure any lacquer that could withstand the hard usages that the average bed is subject to. The new finish has been thoroughly tested in every conceivable way and all beds having this finish are warranted for 10 years by one of the largest, if not the largest, manufacturer in the country. Ask to see these beds.

Why We Are In an Undisputed Position to Sell Furniture at Lower Prices Than Any Other Store

The UNITED PURCHASING POWER of the Four Siegel Stores, Boston, New York (2) and Chicago, enables us to buy in such quantities that manufacturers are willing to turn their entire factories over to our orders alone, thereby practically giving us our own furniture manufactories. The savings in this sale are positively wonderful—in many instances prices are less than actual wholesale cost—for example, the brass beds we quote are positively from two to three dollars less than cost of manufacture, the mattresses, if bought by the pound, the raw material would amount to more than our selling price, and there are many pieces of furniture for every room that are priced at actually 25% less than wholesale factory price. A large number of salesmen who have practical knowledge of furniture have been engaged for this sale, and a greatly increased delivery service has been inaugurated. Nothing has been left undone to make this sale larger than all others combined. We mention only a small list of the many bargains in this sale.

ADLER SAYS GARY SHOULD SHOW BOOKS

Slashing Reply to Statement Recently Made by Head of the Steel Trust.

NEW YORK, Jan. 20.—Dr. Felix Adler, the well known educational reformer and teacher in America, came out to-day with a slashing attack upon the statement recently issued by Robert H. Gary, executive head of the Steel Trust, in reply to the severe arraignment of that giant corporation made at the Republican Club of New York on January 13, by Louis D. Brandeis of Boston.

Mr. Brandeis criticisms touched with special fervor upon the labor conditions at the many plants of the Steel Trust. He particularly indicted the management of the big corporation for its treatment of the more than 200,000 employes in its service, with special reference to the allegation that a considerable proportion of them worked twelve hours a day and seven days in the week, and that some of them were kept at their posts on occasions as long as seven-four hours.

"Are not the directors of the Steel Corporation themselves qualified—if they do not their humanitarian instincts—to realize that twelve hours a day labor is excessive and unreasonable?" inquired Dr. Adler. "Pensions have a tendency to tether the employe to the employer," he continued. "For this reason the German government has adopted the system of State pensions, under which the wave earner may pass from employer to employer without jeopardizing the security of his old age.

"The danger of differential unionism is effect by the danger of industrial absolutism. The attempt is being made to conduct our great industrial concerns on a quasi-military plan, a state of affairs in which workmen being commanded by officers who are being spurred to intense efficiency by bonuses or promises of promotion, I maintain that no class is good enough—or, if good enough, is not good enough—to govern another; and no board of directors of a great corporation is good enough—or, if good enough, is wise enough—to be solely intrusted with the welfare of hundreds of thousands of human beings who are dependent upon them for their bread."

Dr. Adler insists that Judge Gary should accompany his reply to Mr. Brandeis's criticism with the actual figures taken from the books of the steel trust, so that the several pension and benefit funds referred to by Judge Gary are genuine, publishing the work of philanthropy claimed for them by the managers of the corporation.

ASSERTS MORSE WILL KEEP MOUTH CLOSED

His Friend Seeley Says Big Men of Wall Street Need Not Worry.

NEW YORK, Jan. 20.—Charles W. Morse's reticence on matters on which he has inside information which, if divulged, probably would put the financial world on edge and perhaps send some of the big men of the country scurrying to cover, will be in no wise affected by the commutation of his sentence.

This opinion was expressed to-day by F. L. Seeley, editor of the Atlanta Georgian, of Atlanta, Ga., to whose efforts more than any other agency the convicted banker owes his freedom.

"Morse will never write that chapter of his career," said Mr. Seeley to-day, "unless he charges materially his present point of view. He has suffered the tortures of imprisonment without telling those things that he could which would shake the foundation of Wall Street, and it is unlikely that he will break his silence now.

"It will be a month at least, in my judgment, before Mr. Morse will leave the hospital," Mr. Seeley continued. "As soon as he is in a condition to be removed he will be taken to Savannah and placed on a steamer for some climate where he will be able to live out of doors."

Woods, president; Miah Crowley, vice-president; Joseph Sheerin, secretary, and Hugh J. McElaney, treasurer.

GOV. FOSS'S SON TO WED OLD PLAYMATE

Engagement of Katherine Cobb to Guy Noble Foss Is Announced.

The engagement was announced yesterday of Guy Noble Foss, second and youngest son of Governor Foss's family, to Miss Katherine Cobb, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick L. Cobb of No. 25 Lakeville place, Jamaica Plain.

Only last August Benjamin Sturtevant Foss, the Governor's oldest son, was married in San Francisco to Miss Dorothy Emily Chapman of that city.

There are two other younger members of the Governor's family. They are twin daughters, Misses Esther and Helen Foss.

The romance of Guy Noble Foss, or Noble Foss as he is generally known, and of Miss Katherine Cobb, is of long standing. They were playmates together in Jamaica Plain. Their families have been intimate for years. The children quarreled and made up as children will, and then they arrived at the dignity of young manhood and Miss Cobb waxed in maidenly charm. The childhood acquaintance developed into warm friendship and then into love.

Fiance an Aviator.

The Cobb-Foss engagement might be called an aviation romance.

Miss Cobb is a strikingly handsome blonde of good height. She meets that oft-quoted description: "Divinely tall and most divinely fair."

For the past two years Noble Foss has been connected with the firm of Curtiss Aero Works at Hyde Park, of which his father is the head.

In the past few months young Mr. Foss has been interested in aviation. Together with Harry Nelson Atwood, aeronaut, and Mr. Schumaker had a twenty-five-foot fall in it a month later.

Despite these discouraging episodes, Mr. Foss is as keen for aviation as ever.

Naturally, Miss Cobb has been vastly interested in the aviation ambitions of the young man now announced as her fiance. She was particularly concerned about the fall which Mr. Foss sustained, and was thankful that he received no worse injury than a general shaking up.

Wins Success in Love.

Fortunately for Mr. Foss's peace of mind, his love-making was much more successful than his aviating. He won Miss Cobb's heart and now the engagement is announced.

It may be that the recent wedding of his elder brother encouraged Noble Foss to begin actively for a wedding of himself. When Benjamin Sturtevant Foss was married he was the cynosure of many eyes. The Foss family crossed the country to be present. Just after the ceremony the bridal couple arrived in Boston and went to the Foss home in Jamaica Plain, together. They are there now but will set up housekeeping this week in a suite in the same apartment house where the family of Noble Foss's fiancee lives, at No. 23 Lakeville place.

With the example of the wedding and the presence of his brother's bridal couple constantly before him, it may have struck Noble Foss that what his elder brother can do he can do also.

Naturally the two are interested in the families of the young people. The parents have watched the development of acquaintance into friendship, and of friendship into love with interest and approval. The Governor and his wife are delighted with their new daughter-in-law from San Francisco. They have seen two son married and settled in life. They, eldest third youngest son's fiancee lady. Now they look forward to seeing the second son a married man.

No date for the wedding is announced, but it is not thought that a long engagement is intended.

Mrs. Wellington and E. D. Leavitt of Cambridge the Donors.

A tract of land adjoining the Harvard Street Unitarian Church of Cambridge, recently erected the Third Congregational Society of that city, has been presented to that church as a joint gift of Mrs. Austin C. Wellington and E. D. Leavitt of Cambridge. The land comprises about a square foot. The land was purchased by Mrs. Wellington from E. D. Leavitt, who made a substantial allowance on the assessed valuation as his contribution. The gift was made in memory of the parents of Mrs. Wellington, George and Hannah C. Fisher.

SHOE MEN RETURN.

Well Pleased With Reception by Tariff Board at Washington.

Harry I. Thayer, chairman of the Tariff Committee, of the New England Shoe and Leather Association, returned from Washington yesterday where, together with other representatives of the New England Shoe and Leather Association, he had attended a hearing before the Tariff Board regarding the proposed investigation of the shoe and leather industry. Mr. Thayer says that everyone was favorably impressed with the broad grasp of the shoe and leather industry the members of the Tariff Board possess. They were especially pleased with Chairman Emery.

E. T. S. CLUB'S PARTY.

Feature of the Annual Dance Will Be the "Telephone Twist."

The E. T. S. Club, composed of telephone operators from the Back Bay Exchange, will hold their annual party in Wheelock Hall, Upham's Corner, Dorchester, next Friday evening. The officers in charge are Miss Helen Mahoney, president; Miss Hilda Jansen, secretary, and Miss Mae Beck, secretary. It is proposed by the club members to introduce the "Telephone Twist," the latest thing in a waltz.

MRS. K. L. STEVENSON, THE ONLY LOBBYESS AT THE STATE HOUSE

MRS. KATHARINE STEVENSON

Mrs. Stevenson is president of the M. W. C. T. U., and she is working for the bill to prohibit the sale of liquor in Massachusetts.

THERE'S A LOBBYESS ON BEACON HILL NOW

Beacon Hill has a lobbyess.

"Jake" Wardwell please note.

"Lobbyess" as feminine of lobbyist. Lobbyists are not new on Beacon Hill. But lobbyesses are.

Prepare yourself for a second shock. The lobbyess is Mrs. Katherine Lente Stevenson, president of the Massachusetts Women's Christian Temperance Union, and a woman of international renown.

She is chairman of the legislative committee of the M. W. C. T. U. and, as such, is delegated by the Union to solicit legislation in behalf of bills that the M. W. C. T. U. advocates.

A lobbyist, pure and simple, is not necessarily a malefactor of great evil. True, some lobbyists are not pure. Few are simple. But the specific term "lobbyist" need not imply anything irregular. So as lobbyess may be likewise a most estimable person.

Dr. Noble Foster in his "best-selling" dictionary says that "The term lobbying does not necessarily imply any corrupt influence."

Besides, look at the bills for which Mrs. Stevenson is "lobbyessing." One is to prohibit manufacture or sale of liquor in Massachusetts. Another bill is designed to strengthen the law against polygamy. A very proper mendate in the interest of way of thinking.

Legislators who look for bribes of cigars or embroidered slippers from the honorable lobbyess will be disappointed. She has only arguments to offer.

REGIMENT IN REUNION.

Twenty-Fourth Elects New Officers and Has Banquet.

The forty-fourth annual reunion of the Twenty-fourth Regiment Association was held at the Quincy House yesterday afternoon. At the annual business meeting the following officers were elected: James Armstrong, Company I, president; Thomas Hogan, Company E, vice-president; Franklin Osborne, Company A, second vice-president; John S. Cook, Company C, corresponding secretary; A. H. Knowles, Company F, recording secretary; Quartermaster James Thompson, treasurer; Chaplain A. Fitch, Company B, chaplain. After the annual business meeting the present members were read, and all talked over old times. The speakers were ex-Mayor Samuel Green and Hon. A. S. Rowe of Worcester.

MAETERLINCK THE MAGNET.

Pleased Audience Hears Lecture on "Pelleas et Melisande."

Madame Georgette Leblanc Maeterlinck interpreted portions of "Pelleas et Melisande" to an enthusiastic audience made up mostly of students of music, who packed Jacob's Sleeper Hall yesterday afternoon for the second lecture in the Boston University Opera course series. Olin Downes, the lecturer, discussed the work from the points of view of critic and musician. Madame Maeterlinck was in excellent voice and her part in the program was heartily appreciated and applauded. Next week the history of the Italian opera will be resumed, the third lecture ending with the time of Rossini.

CHANGES LIKELY IN INSPECTION SYSTEM

Two More Bodies, Probably of Domestics, Found in Ruins of Revere House.

A complete reorganization of the inspection system of the building department is to be one of the important changes that the Finance Commission will recommend as a result of its investigation.

That the inspection system of the building department has been unsatisfactory and inadequate for some time has been known at City Hall. Building Commissioner Arthur G. Everett had constantly complained that he lacked the necessary number of inspectors to have the work thoroughly done.

The Revere House fire, which disclosed the fact that the fire escapes had not been inspected for three years, has aroused the public to the needs of more rigid inspection, and letters are pouring into the Mayor urging a more complete and efficient supervision of old and new structures.

Two More Bodies Found.

Yesterday two more bodies were recovered from the Revere House ruins. They are believed to be the remains of Susan Doherty and Annie McDevitt, domestics employed at the hotel.

The fact that the Revere House fire was not more costly in life, in view of the loss of the ground has caused the Building Department to come in for criticism.

Building Commissioner Everett is an architect, who was placed in his present position by former Mayor Hibbard. His appointment did not require the confirmation of the Board of Commission. Mayor Fitzgerald retained him in office.

Inspection System Criticised.

Several times within the past two years there has been severe criticism of the inspection system of the department, especially after accidents where it has been demonstrated that proper supervision was lacking. Mayor Fitzgerald has been urged to remove Everett but has hesitated, he says, because of the difficulty in getting an appointee confirmed by the Civil Service Board. Since the Revere House fire the pressure to have him removed has been renewed and it is not thought improbable that the Mayor may take such action.

Until the report of the Finance Commission upon the department has been made, no definite action will be taken at City Hall, but if the report shows that the department is inefficiently managed, the Mayor has promised to make some changes.

BURIED IN BRIDAL GOWN.

Mrs. Grace Carter Will Be Laid at Rest at Biddeford, Me.

Mrs. Grace Edith (Means) Carter, a bride of four months, whose funeral service took place yesterday afternoon, will be buried at Biddeford, Me., this afternoon in her bridal gown. There will be a second service in the church in Biddeford where Mrs. Carter was married on September 19. The service yesterday was at the home of Mrs. Carter's mother, Mrs. L. E. Downing if Everett. The body was then taken to Biddeford.

Sunday Afternoon Concert.

The second Sunday afternoon concert of the church running at Parker Memorial will be held this afternoon at 4 o'clock, the concerts will be under S. M. Thorndike, violinist; Miss Harriet A. Shaw, harpist; Miss Leonie Brown, soprano; Mrs. Harry B. Taplin, accompanist and organist.

Whiskey and Pine for Colds

Pine Formula for Old Time Remedy Cured Thousands Here Last Winter.

The increased use of whiskey for colds is causing considerable discussion among the medical fraternity. It is an almost infallible cure when mixed with certain other ingredients and taken properly. "From your druggist get two ounces of Glycerine and half an ounce of Concentrated Pine Compound. Take these two ingredients home and put them into a half pint of good whiskey. Shake well and take one to two teaspoonfuls after each meal and at bedtime." Smaller doses to children according to age. This treatment often knocks the worst cough or cold in a day. But be sure to get only the genuine Globo Concentrated Pine. Each half ounce bottle comes in a sealed tin screw-top case. If your druggist does not have it in stock he will quickly get it. Don't experiment with cheap uncertain mixtures. It is very risky. Loud complaints say this has been a marvelous demand for the past six years.

HOLY CROSS CLUB OF BOSTON TO BANQUET

Graduates of Every Class From 1855 to 1911 Have Promised to Attend.

Next Wednesday evening the annual banquet and meeting of the Holy Cross Club of Boston will be held at Young's Hotel. Much enthusiasm over the event prevails among the Boston graduates of H. C., and members from every class from 1855 to 1911 have written the secretary promising to attend.

Rev. Fr. Joseph N. Dinand, S. J., the president of Holy Cross, and the first Boston man to be placed at the head of the Worcester college, will be the special guest of the evening.

Since leaving Boston, Fr. Dinand has travelled extensively, both preaching and lecturing in many of the famous Jesuit colleges on the Atlantic coast. Already it has been his good fortune to secure many substantial assurances from the graduates of the college of their interest in Holy Cross, the most notable of which has been the $100,000 building given by Bishop Hendrick and friends of the Springfield diocese.

Thomas H. Dowd, '93, will be the toastmaster; President Dinand, Rev. John H. Fahey, '81, treasurer of the college; Rev. Joseph E. Mullen, S. J., vice-president; Dr. Thomas J. Kelly, '80, treasurer; Rev. William P. McQuaid, '04, and Rev. Thomas P. McManus, '77, will be the principal speakers.

The Glee Club will contribute an elaborate program to the evening's entertainment.

The officers of the club who have the banquet of Wednesday night in charge are: Joseph J. McConnell, '80, president; Michael J. Connolly, '87, vice-president; Thomas J. Kelly, '80, treasurer; John B. Dore, 91, secretary; George F. Morris, '07, financial secretary; William H. Fahey, '02; Rev. Lawrence N. Slattery, '01, and James M. Hoy, '07, are the executive committee.

MISS JANE MORGAN THE GUEST OF HONOR

Granddaughter of the Great Financier Makes Her Bow to Society in Boston.

Miss Jane Morgan, favorite of the ten grandchildren of J. Pierpont Morgan, and heiress of many millions, made her bow to Boston society yesterday afternoon.

Mrs. Boylston Beal, her aunt, gave an "At home" at her residence, No. 104 Beacon street, which was attended by Boston's finer circle of about three or four hundred. Miss Morgan and her mother, Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, Jr., who is Mrs. Beal's sister, were the guests of honor.

Gowned in pale blue silk, and carrying a large bouquet of lilies of the valley, Miss Morgan looked very girlish and won Boston's composite heart completely. Boston's heart was also a bit flattered that Miss Morgan should choose Boston as the scene of her debut. Miss Morgan and her daughter are guests of Mrs. Henry S. Grew, of No. 91 Beacon street, Boston, relatives of Mrs. Morgan.

HAD CATARRH THIRTY YEARS.

EX-Congressman Meekison Gives Praise To Pe-ru-na For His Relief From Catarrh.

EX-CONGRESSMAN MEEKISON COMMENDS PE-RU-NA.

"I have used several bottles of Peruna and I feel greatly benefited thereby from my catarrh of the head. I feel encouraged to believe that if I use it a short time longer I will be fully able to eradicate the disease of thirty years' standing."—David Meekison.

PERUNA RESTORED HEALTH.

Mr. C. N. Peterson, 122 South Main St., Council Bluffs, Iowa, writes: "I cannot tell you how much good Peruna has done me. Constant confinement in my store began to tell on my health, and I felt that I was gradually breaking down. I tried several remedies, but obtained no permanent relief until I took Peruna. I felt better immediately, and five bottles restored me to complete health."

A SINCERE RECOMMENDATION.

Mr. D. C. Prosser, R. R. 6, Shelby, Oceana Co., Michigan, writes: "Two years ago I was badly afflicted with catarrh of the stomach. I had had a run of typhoid fever, was very depleted. I could find nothing I could eat without causing distress and sour stomach. Finally I came to the conclusion that I had catarrh of the stomach, and seeing Peruna advertised, began to take it. It helped me soon, and after taking three or four bottles I was entirely cured of stomach trouble, and can now eat anything."

The "Stretch" in Shade Cloth is Responsible for Much Wrong-Doing

You've had window shades that didn't wear, that became perforated with innumerable holes and long, ugly cracks. The cloth from which these shades were made was originally 36 inches wide. The man that made the shades "stretched" it enough to make the holes and still have the finished shade nearly its original width. He "spoiled the life out of that shade," and sold it a little cheaper to you—but it proved mighty expensive in the end, didn't it? WE'LL BE GLAD TO GIVE YOU AN ESTIMATE FOR NEW SHADES THAT WILL "STAY NEW." PERHAPS THEY WON'T COST AS MUCH AS THE INFERIOR SORT.

REPORT ROOSEVELT HITCHCOCK CONFAB

Postmaster-General Believed to Have Promised Southern Delegates Support.

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., Jan. 20.—Although Colonel Roosevelt would not admit it, a strong impression prevails that the ex-President and Postmaster-General Hitchcock had a secret conference to-day in New York. When this was broached to the colonel on the train on the way from New York to-night, Mr. Roosevelt assumed a quizzical air.

"Hitchcock," he repeated. "Why, I didn't know he was in town until I read in the newspapers that he had arrived."

Pressed to say if he did not actually meet the Taft Cabinet member in New York Mr. Roosevelt replied:

"Why, how could I have met him? My time was all taken up."

Mr. Roosevelt abruptly dismissed the Hitchcock incident, saying there was nothing for him to discuss about it.

Mr. Hitchcock arrived in the city in the morning and was busy with callers until shortly after noon. Then he suddenly disappeared from the Manhattan Hotel. Coincidentally with the Hitchcock disappearance Colonel Roosevelt abruptly left his editorial offices and did not return.

Promise of Delegates.

One story has it that Mr. Roosevelt and the truculent Postmaster-General who has broken with the Taft administration met at the National Arts Club, on Gramercy Park, while another version was that they went to the Union League. They are reported to have had luncheon together, with the entire situation respecting the ante-convention nomination fight as the subject of discussion. Mr. Hitchcock is reported to have given Colonel Roosevelt assurance that he can count on a block of Southern delegates to the national convention if he stays in the fight.

Colonel Roosevelt left his office about the time that President Taft was coming in from New Haven.

Asked if he would not tarry and shake hands with the man he had boosted into the Presidency, his erstwhile boom chum, Mr. Taft, Mr. Roosevelt smiled broadly and exclaimed:

"Great Hurry" to Get Home.

"I'm in a great hurry to get to Oyster Bay."

The ex-President was in fine humor, on top of the interview given out by Former Governor J. Franklin Fort of New Jersey, in which Fort expressed the expectation that Mr. Roosevelt would come out now with a definite announcement so his friends could vigorously push ahead with their work in his campaign for re-nomination.

"If Mr. Fort gave that interview out it was on own responsibility," declared the Colonel.

TO BUY CLUBHOUSE.

Acacia Club May Purchase Fine Estate on Cushing Avenue.

The new Acacia Club of Dorchester, the membership of which is restricted to Masons, held a meeting last night at their temporary quarters on Cushing avenue, Dorchester, during which the purchase of the Chadwick estate at No. 20 Cushing avenue, for a clubhouse was considered. The estate is one of the finest in that section of the city and is valued at $35,000. President William B. Rand was the presiding officer. A number of Dorchester, Milton and Roxbury Masons were admitted to membership.

3 RESCUED IN FIRE.

Aged Woman and Invalid Saved From Smoke at Haverhill.

HAVERHILL, Jan. 20.—Three persons were rescued from suffocation by smoke at a fire which broke out in the basement of the three-story brick building occupied by W. H. Graham, undertaker, on Main street to-night. Their names are: Floyd Rand, who was asleep in the back room of the undertaking shop; Mrs. Susan Gallego, an aged negress, who was in a room in one of the tenements upstairs, and Joseph Ferrenetti, an invalid, who was confined to his bed in a room on the third floor.

WOMAN SAVES THREE GRANDSONS AT FIRE

Mrs. Dora Tanenbaum Fights Through Smoke in Blaze At Dorchester.

Mrs. Dora Tanenbaum of No. 21 Walcott street, Dorchester, saved her six months-old grandson, Albert Smith, during a fire that partially destroyed their home yesterday afternoon, and then fighting her way bravely back into the home through the smoke, she rescued two grandchildren, George Smith, three and a half years old, and Herbert Smith, two years old.

In the street, with the three little grandsons safely beside her, Mrs. Tanenbaum asked her neighbors: "Where is Mollie?"

She referred to her eighteen-year-old daughter, who was the only other person in the house with Mrs. Tanenbaum and the children at the time of the fire.

She was told that her daughter had rushed into the house to save her wardrobe from the flames. The girl had to ascend two flights of stairs to the attic. When she finally reappeared, she bore bundles of dresses on either arm.

"Thank God, we are all safe," Mrs. Tanenbaum exclaimed.

The fire started in an attic room from an unknown cause. Mrs. Tanenbaum had her youngest grandchild in her arms at the time. She saved him first and then returned to the playroom where the other two boys were. The little ones are the children of Mrs. Harry B. Smith, Mrs. Tanenbaum's daughter.

The damage amounted to $1,500.

ORDER ON ARLINGTON STREET IS DEFEATED

Vote in City Council Stands Six to Two Against the Extension.

The City Council turned down the $400,000 loan order for the extension of Arlington street, at a special meeting yesterday.

The debate was frequently mingled with personalities.

Councilman Smith said the Finance Commission should have furnished the Council with information on the matter.

Councilman Kenny said the New Haven road should make a much more liberal proposition in the matter of payment of betterments.

Councilmen Buckley, McDonald, Collins, Kenny, Attridge and Ballantyne voted to reject the order. Councilmen Smith and Hale voted in favor of it.

Mayor Fitzgerald said he would present the order again when the new city council organizes.

The council voted $175,000 additional for the Chelsea North bridge, for which $250,000 has already been authorized, and turned down loan orders for $50,000 for a new children's ward at the Consumptives hospital, $15,000 for a new gymnasium in ward 8, and $30,000 for the purchase of wharf property in East Boston.

Councilman Hale, Attridge and Kenny were named a special committee on city planning.

Publicity Committee Named.

At the last meeting of the Executive Council of the Massachusetts State Board of Trade it was voted that a committee on publicity, consisting of five members, including the secretary, be added to the list of the standing committees of the Executive Council. Hutchinson, Arlington, Mass.; Charles R. Putnam, No. 120 Boylston street, Boston; Richard L. Gay, No. 6 Beacon street, Boston.

ARMOUR'S EXPERT HAS BAD MEMORY

CHICAGO, Jan. 20.—The government turned its ace directly on the National Packing Company today. William E. Weber, auditor and chief accountant of the National, was called to the witness stand and an examination began by which the prosecution expects to prove its contention that this corporation was the successor of the famous packers' pool, which dissolved in 1902.

Weber was called the "Dunnies of the National Packing Company" by District Attorney Wilkerson, who conducted the examination. Huge volumes of books were lugged into court just before Weber was called. They were the property of eleven of the constituent companies of the National Packing Company.

The preliminary testimony dealt with the formation of the National Packing Company, and the intricate bookkeeping system made necessary by the colossal consolidation of over thirty packing concerns, the chief of which were the Anglo-American Provision Company, the Omaha Packing Company, the Colorado Packing Company, the New York Dressed Beef Company, Sturtevant & Hailey Beef & Provision Company and Hammond Brothers.

Before Weber was sworn James C. McLeese, head cost figure clerk for Armour & Co. at Kansas City, was sworn and developed an amazing lack of memory.

McLeese not only could not remember anything about the cost prices were in the years 1907, 1908 and 1909, but was also loath as to who could supply information, who his personal assistants were in the Kansas City office.

No memos or diaries of the figures could be supplied to the government by McLeese, whose assignment was unique, inasmuch when shown a copy of a telegram signed Henry P. Magher, dated April 11, 1910, inquiring him that the killing cost of cattle for that day was $2.25 per head.

You Don't Need a New Stomach

You Can Now Look Any Meal Square in the Face, and Then Just "Go For It," If You Take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Trial Package Sent Free to Prove It.

The stomach will go on patiently for years enduring abuse, overwork and general ill-treatment. So we're apt to think it can stand anything. But when the stomach does rebel, look out!

"Every Meal Smiles at Me Now Since I've Been Taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets."

The minute the stomach ceases to perform its functions properly the whole body begins to suffer. The food is only half-digested, the body only half-nourished. And the undigested portion of the food ferments and decays, generating nauseating gases which derange the whole system. The eventual result is chronic dyspepsia, heartburn, bad breath, dizziness, flatulency and sick headache.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets instantly relieve all ailments of the stomach and digestive tract. They act quickly, safely and naturally—just like Nature herself. They contain in themselves the elements which go to make up the natural gastric juices. They actually digest the food, relieving the stomach of all the hard work. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are the standby of many a doctor in the worst cases of stomach trouble, and they never fail him.

All druggists carry and recommend Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. They are sold at 50 cents a box. If you want to try them first, we will send you a trial package free on receipt of your name and address. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

DOUBLE GUARD AT GOVERNOR'S HOME

Discovery of Dynamite at Lawrence Causes Extra Police Precautions.

Governor Foss slept at his home in Jamaica Plain last night under a double police guard, which patrolled along all four sides of the Foss home, to protect the Governor from the threatened attack by dynamiters, made in connection with the Lawrence strike.

The guard of patrolmen from the Jamaica Plain police station was doubled late yesterday afternoon as a result of the discovery of three quantities of dynamite in Lawrence.

The Governor was under police protection all day yesterday at the State House. When he left his home in the morning, he was accompanied on his walk to Beacon Hill by two members of the State police force, Joseph V. Daly and Michael J. Barrett.

Guard at State House.

Through the day Inspectors Daly and Hardiman of General Whitney's staff were stationed in the Executive Chamber, while Inspector Barrett remained in the basement of the State House on emergency duty.

Instructions were telephoned to Captain Harriman of Station 15 yesterday to have the Governor's home on Perkins street, Jamaica Plain, guarded day and night. Through the afternoon three police men remained on duty in the yard of the home. Late in the day two other patrolmen were detailed to guard the house. All four patrolmen are in civilian clothes.

The Governor remained at the State House with Secretary Holman until late last night. He kept in close touch with the situation at Lawrence over the long distance telephone. At 9:10 o'clock, on receiving word that things appeared quiet in the mill city, the Governor left his office accompanied by two State detectives.

Watch Governor's Home.

They escorted him to his automobile. The Governor drove off to his home with the chauffeur, disobeying the inspectors in front of the State House.

Patrolman M. E. Kurtz patrolled the front of the Foss home last night. Patrolman Walter King watched the house on the rear. On the Alveata street side Patrolman [illegible] Dorr did duty, walking back and forth between Seventh avenue and Revere street. Policeman Patrick Cullen patrolled Elm street and a part of Revere street.

BRAY ALARM STILLED.

Sterling Jackass Roused All, but He's Dead After 20 Years.

STERLING, Jan. 20.—Sterling's living alarm clock is dead after twenty years of faithful service. The alarm clock was Joel T. Wilder's intelligent jackass. The "jack" brayed every morning in time to arouse the people throughout the town for breakfast. He never failed, rain or shine. He never had to be wound or set. He was a self-winding and self-acting institution. And his very best any alarm that a clock factory ever produced.

The sagacity of Wilder's jackass has been widely told. He was a comic brute. He could kick harder and faster than Big Chief Bender can pitch a ball. He could kick a curve, too, according to citizens who have acted as involuntary backstop for the "jack's" lightning delivery.

BAER TO MEET MINERS.

Old Four-State Joint Conference Will Be Resumed.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 20.—President John P. White opened the convention of the United Mine Workers to-day by denying stories that an interstate joint conference would not be held. He asserted that the old four-state conference, discontinued in 1906, would again be taken up. He read a communication from George Baer, of the anthracite operators in Pennsylvania, saying they will meet anthracite miners in New York February 27, to discuss the wage scale.

HEARING ON GARBAGE BID.

Discussion of Matter to Be Made on Tuesday.

Mayor Fitzgerald will hold a public hearing Tuesday on the question of the acceptance of the $1,500,000 bid for a new garbage plant, submitted by the Boston Development and Sanitary Company, and which is opposed by Commissioner Rourke and the City Council. The Mayor, who visited the company's plant in Brooklyn to observe their methods, feels, it is understood, that the contract should go to a home company, the Boston Disposal Company, instead of to the Brooklyn concern.

Dorothy Coburn is Engaged to Vincent Club Girl to Wed

MISS DOROTHY COBURN OF JAMAICA PLAIN

MISS DOROTHY COBURN

Miss Coburn was a debutante two years ago. She is a daring horsewoman and an expert at tennis and golf.

James Sidney Stone of Beacon Street Wins the Popular Society Girl.

Few engagements announced this season have caused more of a ripple on the calm of the matrimonial sea than has that made public yesterday of pretty Dorothy Coburn, a debutante of only a couple of seasons ago, and a prominent and popular member of the Vincent Club, to James Sidney Stone, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Palmer Stone of Beacon street.

Miss Coburn was one of the most popular belle of her season and immediately upon her presentation was taken into the exclusive folds of the Vincent Club.

She is the daughter of George M. Coburn of Jamaica Plain.

Mr. Stone is a Harvard man, class of 1905, and is a member of the Oakley Country Club and the Harvard Club of New York. Miss Coburn is a sister of Miss Louise Coburn, who made her debut a couple of seasons earlier than her sister. The prospective bride is a decidedly accomplished young person. She is a daring horse-woman, and an expert at tennis and golf. She has taken part in several of the Vincent Club events and at the annual Club Show two seasons ago, "Rouge Et Noir," she danced as one of the Reverie Girls.

She is also a good keeper of secrets, for not even her intimates were aware of her engagement until it was formally announced. It is said that the wedding will be an event of the early Spring.

DAFFYDILL WINS AT SOCIETY HORSE SHOW

Miss Frances Bradley Rides to Brilliant Victories; Tad Is Happy.

"Judges, he's in again. His name is Daffydill." That's what the society folks at the new Riding Club said yesterday afternoon when Miss Frances Bradley, one of the dashing young riders of Boston's exclusive society, rode her horse, named from Tad's famous creations in the AMERICAN, to victory after victory, at the exclusive indoor horse show.

"The Daffydills always were winners from the start." Tad wired over last night when he was told of the gameness of his famous creations had carried off blue ribbons.

The gallery was enthusiastic and liberally applauded every effort of horse and rider. Particularly, when Silver Foot, the smallest pony competing in Class Two and driven by little ten-old Theodora Ayer, entered the ring, the gallery was enthusiastic in its applause.

Most interesting to society was the competition for the Motley Club for indies hacks, open only to members of the club and those entitled to its privileges, which was won by Miss Leslie Bradley riding Freewood.

PRESIDENT AT YALE LIKE STUDENT AGAIN

Happy as a Boy as He Attends Chapel and Mingles With Sons of Elf.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 20.—For the first time in many years President Taft spent an entire twenty-four hours almost "neath the old elms of his alma mater when he concluded his visit to Yale and this city this afternoon.

The President was up bright and early and like a large proportion of the Yale student body, ate a hurried breakfast and started for the morning exercises in Battell chapel, which start as regularly as the clock at 8:10 A. M. The President sat with President Hadley on the platform. The exercises were brief without any special attraction from the usual routine. The President leaved his head at devotions, sang the morning hymns and appeared happy as a boy.

During the chapel exercises the fire alarm rang and the President spent a few minutes on the campus in the company of President Hadley watching the fire. A good-sized crowd of Yale men and townspeople followed the presidential party. The students cheered the President repeatedly.

The President's day included a visit with a few friends and prominent Republicans of the city and state at his quarters at the Hotel Taft after his return from the Yale chapel exercises; attendance at the Yale corporation meeting at 10:45 until about 1 p. m.; attendance at a luncheon at the home of President Hadley, and departure for New York at 3:35 p. m.

President Taft dined yesterday with Colonel Isaac M. Ullman, president of the local Chamber of Commerce and one of the Republican leaders of the State, and it is stated that while here he had a conference with Governor Weeks. There will be no doubt of the unanimous support of Connecticut in the national convention.

NEW ANTHRAX CURE DISCOVERED IN LYNN

Terrors of Usually Fatal Disease Eliminated by Physicians at City Hospital.

ANTHRAX—An infectious and usually fatal bacterial disease.—Webster's New International Dictionary.

The terrors of anthrax, one of the most fatal diseases known to medical science and dreaded the world over, has been conquered by the physicians at the Lynn City Hospital, according to the annual report of the hospital made public yesterday. The physicians have discovered a new treatment which is said to have been entirely successful in every case they have treated, with but a single exception. The new cure has already attracted the attention of the leading surgeons of the country.

Hardly a week went by during the year but the hospital doctors had to treat at least one case. The only fatal case at the hospital was due to the neglect of the patient himself, it is claimed.

Anthrax, also known as "wool sorter's disease" and "malignant pustule," has been traced to the goat and sheep skins which are shipped to the leather factories in that city. The disease is first known by its appearance as a small black pimple. Often the head of the patient swells to twice the normal size.

The cure discovered by Dr. Joseph F. O'Hea, city physician of Lynn, consists in the treatment of the disease by an immediate operation. It is necessary, according to his theory, that the wound be left open for proper drainage. An antiseptic poultice is then used. This method has resulted in so many cures that Lynn doctors say the disease need no longer be classed in the "usually fatal" class.

Yesterday James Kinsey, of No. 205 Boston street, Lynn, will be discharged from the Lynn Hospital, cured of anthrax. He has been undergoing treatment for the past two weeks.

QUINCY COUPLES WHO WERE PRINCIPALS IN DOUBLE WEDDING

HANNA JOHANSON.

OTTO S. JOHANSON. ERIC A. ERICKSON.

AUGUSTA HENDRIKSON.

When Eric Erickson told Otto Johanson that he was to marry the latter's sister, Johanson said: "Wait a minute," and ran out. When he quickly returned Johanson announced that he had arranged for his own wedding, having just been accepted by his sweetheart.

QUINCY THE SCENE OF DOUBLE WEDDING

Miss Johanson Bride of Eric Erickson, Miss Hendrikson Becomes Mrs. Johanson.

In a double ceremony at Quincy last evening, Miss Hanna Johanson and her brother, Otto, stepped into the realm of wedded happiness.

Miss Johanson became the bride of Eric Erickson. The couple have been sweethearts for many years. Eric proposed a few evenings ago and was accepted. He confided his delightful secret to Hanna's brother, Otto.

"Wait," said Otto, "before you tell any one else. I have something to propose."

"What is it?" asked Eric.

"Stay here and I'll be back in a short time," said the excited Otto, and grabbing his hat and coat he disappeared.

Eric was somewhat frightened at the strange actions of the young man, fearing that it had something to do with his own wedding. Soon Otto returned, blushing and happy.

"It's all right," he exclaimed. "I'm going to be married, too. I just asked Augusta Hendrikson and have my consent. She consented. We'll have a double wedding."

The two young men leased a two-family house on Nelson avenue. The wedding took place in the apartment to be occupied by Mr. Erickson and his bride. The Rev. A. F. Andrea of Waltham performed the ceremony.

Following the marriage a wedding feast was partaken of in Protection Hall. Algot Erickson, a brother of Eric, acted as best man, and Miss Annie Gustafson will act as bridesmaid at the Erickson-Johanson ceremony. Carl Hendrikson, a brother of Johanson's bride, was the groomsman and Miss Annie Lund bridesmaid at the Johanson-Hendrikson ceremony. The brides were dressed alike.

F. GORDON, SENT TO LAWRENCE, IS O. 'K.'

And, Being O. K., Mr. Gordon Isn't Expected to Worry Friends of "K."

HAVERHILL, Jan. 20.—Residents of this city are wondering whether "Schedule K" will get away with it and whether the work of looking into illegal immigration at Lawrence is going to be assigned to Inspector F. G. B. Gordon without a protest to Washington.

Gordon, according to statements in the newspapers on Thursday, has been especially assigned to Lawrence. There was some comment here and there at the time that the Department should select a strike period as the right time for a probe, but there has been more, for a day or two, on the choice of a prober.

Inspector Gordon, a Haverhill man, is a field lieutenant of the Lodge machine in Massachusetts politics. He has been a banqueter at the rooms of the Republican State Committee. He very much disapproves of the breed of cats called Progressive Republicans and he is on record in that disapproval. He also believes that the Republican machine in Massachusetts would be better off if "New Bedford methods" were adopted generally by Republican local committees. And he is on record in that belief.

Writes Letters to the Press.

Labor people is this neighborhood declare that the assignment of Gordon to any official part in the strike in the "Schedule K" city is the the big scandal of the Lawrence trouble up to this time.

A few years ago Gordon was a constant writer of letters to the press. He had once been one of the most prominent Socialists in New England. Along in the middle 90's he swung completely about, becoming one of Socialism's sharpest critics.

Three or four days after the recent election, Inspector Gordon, bemoaning the re-election of Governor Foss, wrote this letter to the Boston Journal. It was printed on the Journal's editorial page:

To the Editor Boston Journal:

The demand for a re-organization of the Republican Party Committees calls for some comment.

In the first place, the party elected its whole ticket with the exception of governor by large plurralities, giving Treasurer Stevens over 37,000. Now, Mr. Stevens is just as good a "machine man" as Louis Frothingham, and everybody knows it. If the Republican voters had wanted to rebuke the "machine" they would have cut Mr. Stevens.

Secondly, Mr. Foss got a very big black eye in the election. A net loss of more than 25,000 votes in an off year with a small vote is a pretty big swat.

The Republican State Committee made a splendid fight, and had they been backed up by all the City Committees, Governor Foss would have been defeated by at least five thousand. New Bedford made a great fight and won a great victory, making a net gain of 2,500 votes.

Find out how New Bedford did the job and apply the same to the other cities in all the cities and large towns, and what would happen? Why, we would win the State by 50,000. I have yet to learn of a single Progressive who took hold making any gains for the party. The average Progressive is great on talk and mighty small on doing anything for the party, except to try to have it elect him to office. Think it over.

(Signed) F. G. B. GORDON.
Haverhill, November 11.

Disapproved of Progressives.

It will be observed that Inspector Gordon in this letter, written the month before last, was greatly worried about the talk of re-organizing Republican committees, that he was very much interested in machine men, that he disapproved of "Progressives," and that he liked the New Bedford way.

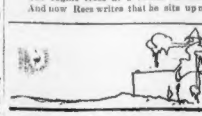
Since Mr. Gordon wrote his letter one New Bedford Republican has been sent up for buying votes. Other New Bedford Republicans may be investigated by the Legislature.

It seems to be the general impression among politicians here that the friends of Schedule K need not be embarrassed by the assignment of Inspector Gordon to Lawrence.

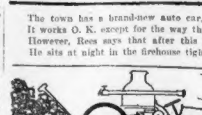
KEEPING THE ENGINE WARM

By MORTON BIRGE.

One Clayton Rees is the fire force chief in suburban Saugus town. With earnest zest he exerts his best in holding a tough job down. The engine froze at a recent fire on account of cold and storm, And now Rees writes that he sits up nights just keeping the engine warm.



The town has a brand-new auto car, a chemical built to please. It works O. K. except for the way that the cold air makes it freeze. However, Rees says that after this he's there on the first alarm. He sits at night in the firehouse tight, just keeping the engine warm.



Though Clayton Rees may be only chief of Suburban Saugus's force, How few like he would so faithful be in holding to duty's course? How few chiefs feel that their jobs require, in keeping to fire chief form, They give their nights and their home delights to keeping the engine warm.

INVESTIGATE $40,000 BLAZE IN HAVERHILL

Academy of Music Destroyed and Guests of Adjoining Hotel Flee to Street.

HAVERHILL, Jan. 20.—Fire Chief Gordon considered the circumstances surrounding the origin of the fire, which early today destroyed the Academy of Music, so suspicious that he requested Fire Marshal Rice to make a thorough investigation.

The firemen think the fire may have been set. After a hasty inspection Fire Marshal Rice said he thought it probably was caused by a carelessly tossed match or cigarette stub. He will make further inquiry before rendering an official report.

The fire caused damage of $40,000. The theatre was owned by the Real Estate Investment Company and was fully insured. The William H. Smith Amusement Company of White Plains, N. Y., held the lease. The theatre was to have been closed Tuesday night owing to poor business.

Two firemen were injured, the night watchman, Clarence Yates, was overcome while asleep in the boiler room and was rescued by Walter Green, who was nearly overcome himself, and sixty guests were forced to flee in their night clothes from the American Hotel adjoining.

Attaches of the theatre held a party on the stage until 2 o'clock, when the fire was discovered.

BOTTLING WORKS BURNED.

Loss of $10,000 at King Philip Plant at Peabody.

Fire which started in the heating plant of the King Philip Bottling Works at West Peabody yesterday caused a damage of $10,000. The fire had gained considerable headway before it was discovered. When the alarm arrived the building, a two-story wooden structure, was in flames. Sparks threatened several tenement houses and business blocks nearby. This is the third time the company's works have been burned.

COLD WEATHER

Drives in the Rats and Mice

Rats and mice are more numerous and commit greater depredations in houses in winter than they do in summer. The cold weather and lack of food out of doors in winter drives them indoors. They know then that there is a warm shelter and food for them.

If all the food supplies could be kept shut in tins or in boxes it would help to keep them away, but how seldom stay where locked out.

It is practically impossible to make a rat-proof building. I have seen notices and read articles about such places, but in all my experience have never found one short time after they got in.

I have known them to burrow down under the foundation walls of buildings to get inside or to get through the sewer pipe, or if every avenue of approach is closed up to wait their turn, and if a door or window is left open, to run in that way; once inside the doors and windows are secured. The rats in the Quincy Market, Boston, one day, I was amused to see a mouse run down the stall of a horse which covered the front of the house. I have no doubt that these horses are familiar with these pests, who use this method of entrance to come and go. Rats and mice are very fond of cats and dogs' food, and outbuildings are infested with rodents before their owners' suppers are attracted to them. Poisoning food thrown away by the workmen. Some of our big stores lose thousands of dollars' worth of merchandise every year through the destructive wrought by these pests. The most reliable method authorized in the world acknowledge they spread disease, and are a menace to the health. But poison will not seem to understand the necessity of getting well.

It can be done so easily and so that you will laugh to think you ever let them stay in your house. Get one Matty's Rat Wonder. This is the powder that is odorless and cleanly, which leaves the rats no chance to die. Price 50c or $1.00, at all druggists and department stores. Three different powders for other pests, or for rats in other and state sure after coloring.

MANCHU ABDICATION IS NOW ASSURED

Edict Drawn Up and Will Be Issued as Soon as Public Safety Will Permit.

PEKIN, Jan. 20. The abdication of the Manchu dynasty is practically an accomplished fact. The edict was drawn up to-day, but not immediately issued because certain minor matters must be taken to prevent an uprising by the reactionary wing of the Imperial house led by Prince Kung, who has formed a combination to endeavor to maintain the dynasty.

Premier Yuan Shi Kai, who has complete control of the army is strengthening the guards in various parts of the city and should the minority of the Imperial family attempt any hostile demonstration it is confidently expected that all of the organized forces of the revolutionists will be ready to crush it at once.

Fear Anti-Foreign Uprising.

An anti-foreign uprising is imminent in Pekin. The Manchu party of the capital, a part of Prince Tsai's cabinet and others who have not already taken refuge in the foreign legations, are fleeing to Manchuria, angered at the possibility of the Imperial family's abdication, and fearful of the consequences of an uprising against the foreigners.

That the safety of the Imperial family is now imminent is believed from the fact that the foreign legations have called for the Pekin garrison ready for instant departure.

A few days ago a complete agreement was reached between Yuan Shi Kai, the President-to-be, and Prince Tsai, the Premier cabinet minister, whereby the latter would abdicate and Yuan Shi Kai would become the first President of China. In this way the government in the north and central provinces, by a small majority, would be left in the hands of the Manchus, and the southern provinces, which have declared their independence of the north, would be represented by the new President, who is expected to be elected by the National Assembly, which has been specially drafted and is called, when Yuan, on board the Manchu vessel, is ready to accept. The abrupt change of plans is said to have been made because the Manchus and they broke off negotiations.

Look for Recognition.

President Sun and the members of the cabinet are fully satisfied that recognition of the republic by the powers will come quicker when the Imperial family has left the country and the Manchus have no further excuse for opposing the republic. Prince Tsai is said to be willing to be the scapegoat for the Manchus, and to accept the responsibility for the massacres of foreigners at Nanking and Pekin, which he has been charged with ordering.

The members of the Pekin cabinet have been notified that they will be required to take the oath of allegiance to the President who will be engaged in drawing up a form of constitution for the new Chinese republic.

The First Steel Column Up

A new chapter in the serial of the new Filene store—the beginning of the Steel Construction. Until recently it was all tearing down and digging out now the Upbuilding begins. Since this photograph was taken a few days ago the columns have gone up. Construction and excavation will go on at the same time. That's the new way. Why wait for the hole to be dug first—the way they formerly did? The building will be well up before the excavation is finished—for we are going down deep. About the present business—we can truthfully state it is growing even faster than we figured it would—and we are optimists in our business.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

Sixty bids will be received for the new Filene building are ready for inspection, and bids are invited from local and New England contractors this week.

LAWRENCE HOPES STRIKERS WIN FIGHT FOR LIVING WAGES

Glittering Posters Lure Many from Their Native Homes to Lawrence

By GERTRUDE L. MARVIN.

Textile workers have been on strike in Lawrence for nine weeks in entire sympathy with the workers for a decent living wage. Almost all the foreigners in the city have been employed in the mills, and the strike has affected practically every one of them. Many of the strikers have been in this country but a few years, and have come here from their native homes in Europe, attracted by the glowing posters which are displayed in the steamship offices in the large cities of Italy, Greece, Syria, Portugal and Poland, telling of the high wages paid in the mills of Lawrence. HEAD OF MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION URGES BETTER MILL WAGES

By MICHAEL J. SULLIVAN,
President of the Lawrence Merchants' Association:

I have no hesitancy in declaring that my sympathy is with the strikers. They deserve more pay than they have been getting and I hope that they will win.

Of course, it is very unfortunate for Lawrence to have such a big strike. The fact that the militia are here and that there has been some disorder may been dissured throughout the country. Lawrence is getting a bad name as a result.

However, I am in favor of having the militia kept here until the trouble is over. I do not think that the strikers plan any violence, but there is no doubt that many idle and strike sympathizers are anxious to go about smashing windows.

The strike is seriously crippling business in Lawrence. The stores ex-

PILGRIMS SIGN A NEW PROMISING MAN FOR THE BOX

FLYNN BUILDS UP TO MEET JOHNSON

Pueblo Fireman Goes Under Care of Tommy Ryan for His Championship Battle.

"A good little man against a good big man, and though in most cases the big man wins, the fight will be remarked that Jim and the memb of Jess will see a new heavyweight champion a while again. In possession of the highest honor in the heavyweight pugilism. And I will tell you my reason for this statement.

Sizing by the criticism that he is too small for the coming battle Jim Flynn has been given to understand repeatedly, reminds any argument that may be urged against his chances by those dreamy theorists to use all the requirements that go to make a champion and touch on weight and at a disadvantage to Jeffries and Jack, he will meet Johnson the July a far different figure than the giant who beat him today.

Flynn to Build Up.

Flynn will leave in a few weeks for Pueblo, where Tommy Ryan will take charge of him. He will begin training immediately for he is to fight Jim Stewart in Los Angeles on February 15. After the fight he will return to Pueblo and do hard training.

His work will consist of taking off weight or putting himself for a fight, but it will be training to add weight to his bones, hardening his muscles and teaching him the finer points of the game. In condition Flynn tips the scales at 178 pounds stripped. Johnson tips the beam at about 220 when in trim. Flynn believes that under the careful supervision of Ryan he can add an additional twenty or twenty-five pounds of weight that will be an advantage instead of a disadvantage to him in his July battle.

Wants to Be Left Alone.

"In training for this fight I am going to insist upon one thing, and that is that I am not going to have too many advisers. I want about two men in whom I have confidence to be with me at all times. This idea of having one fellow tell me one thing and then some other 'guy' come along and tell me just the opposite is 'bunk.' I know Tommy Ryan knows the boxing game and I know he can teach a defense to stop the Johnson wallop, and as for my offensive fighting I am going to be governed I am not going to do a thing to change me. I have confidence enough to work in the punch that I think is effective enough for to land on Johnson. I believe in keeping a fighter some if he has natural ability. I don't play baseball, and anything else when Jeffries was training for Johnson really believe he had too many advisers in the camp.

"When the day of an important fight approaches a fighter really is left alone. He does not want even one friend with him but wants to get in the ring, and do the fighting. That is one of the reasons why I have been so slow to offer any reason for not training.

"I intend to go to Syracuse in a few days and do all my work there for a short visit with Pat Ford in Rochester, and the sooner I master some of the defensive tactics the more time I will have to use them in actual training before the middle of May. I do not know who will be in my training camp. I have left a call to Curley, and I am sure he will be with me."

COMMERCIAL SHOWS BROUGHT OUT NEW TRUCK FEATURES

Exhibit, Closed in New York Last Evening, Was a Pronounced Success, Both as an Educational and Business Proposition

By J. C. KERRISON.

The motor-truck exhibit, which came to a close in New York last evening, gave one some idea of the great proportions to which this particular branch of the motor industry has developed. The display of commercial vehicles of both the gasoline and electric variety was most impressive and furnished great food for consideration on the part of both users of the manufacturers of the trucks themselves. Indeed, many of the men and firms who have now, or will in the future see fit to use the same in their several lines of business.

There was not throughout the week a single thing which did not have an important bearing on the future of the commercial wagon, and the thinking user could had more things than ever to step and consider as to the advisability of using the same in his particular line of business.

The day of commercial motor trucks is at hand. The day when the man sits down with pen and pencil and figures out greater efficiency and greater economy of operation is now; but it has not reached that extensive field to which the full importance of commercial trucks is destined to attain.

As an educational feature the motor truck exhibit was most valuable. As a business feature it was in every sense of the word a success. It impressed upon the thinking and critical the fact that to-day the motor truck is here to stay and when motor trucks were used in a great variety.

In the business districts and last winter when the snow was deep in many streets, motor trucks were called into service on account of their ability to go where horses could not. Indeed, there were instances where they were cost to operate and so on. The cooling system was invariably by water pump, with the usual honeycomb radiator type of construction. The electrics with their inserts seemed to be the favored ones. Timken axles and Gabriel horns were used almost exclusively. Four speeds and reverse were found on the heavy high class products of a necessity of the transmission was well cared for. In all these cases the final drive was by chains and double chains was used in about all of the cases. The solid tire was quite universally in use, while the cushion tire was also in evidence on many of the trucks. The dual tire predominated. Too much of stress cannot be brought forth in that the tractor of the service brakes on all of the trucks is a most important feature in the operation of the wagon.

The display of the various forms of power plants of motor trucks show a great tendency to use the gasoline engine. Another prominent feature is the load weight that the different makes will carry. There is no standard factory to provide for the needs of any particular service vehicle, or in fact might be called a number of loaders. The value of this is only understood by a few men and it is a most important one. The use of wheel requires a special body, and this has had to be done in the case of the operation in the wet roads

TORIES' HOME RULE THREAT STIRS BELFAST

Plan to Seize Hall to Prevent [illegible]

SERIOUS CLASH FEARED

Lord Londonderry Blamed for Leading Move Against Free Speech.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—It has been years since a proposal to hold a meeting in Belfast has caused the trepidation that the Home Office feels over the approaching [illegible] Nationalists and First Lord of the Admiralty Winston Churchill, will await in Ulster Hall. Ulster Unionists announce that they will mass 100,000 followers in the streets about the hall and threaten the demonstration from taking place.

All of the police of Belfast will be on the scene as well as two thousand armed soldiers. Government agents will accompany Mr. Churchill to protect him. A new wave of fear has developed from the threat of the suffragette to take a hand in the proposed meeting despite the dangers which will accompany participation in the affair.

Plan to Seize Hall.

Five thousand Ulonists will enter the hall before the meeting begins, it is announced by the Orangemen's Association, and will entrench themselves there.

These "Loyalists," as they call themselves will endeavor to prevent home rule adherents from entering.

The Ulster Liberal Association, which planned the meeting, has spurred a suggestion that it be called off. Leaders of the association declare that, as citizens and taxpayers, they deserve protection when they are not breaking any laws. On the other hand, Sir Edward Carson, M. P., chairman of the Ulster Organization Association, declares that the meeting is an [illegible] majority of the people in Ulsterland do not want home rule.

"We are not going to stand and we will never [illegible] a Dublin Parliament," said Sir Edward today. "We want no rioting but if the Liberals go ahead with their plans they may expect serious trouble. They are fostering disaster upon themselves."

Predicts General Election.

Nearly a hundred home rule protest meetings will be held Tuesday and Wednesday in Lancashire and Cheshire. On Friday, Bonar Law, the new Unionist leader in the House of Commons, will address a meeting of 10,000 in Albert Hall, London, declaring what is expected to be the most radical speech against the measure yet heard from a high official.

Timothy Healy declares that Premier Asquith and John Redmond are secretly at odds and reiterates his prediction that a general election will come before home rule. Healy's remarks do not, however, carry weight as in his capacity of one exiled from the Irish party, he is virtually [illegible] Asquith's cabinet [illegible] William O'Brien, the [illegible] went is not going to trifle [illegible] to break up, or prevent [illegible] meeting on February 8.

[illegible] nothing will stop his [illegible] the meeting, while Redmond, who [illegible] work for some days, but is now [illegible] he is going to Belfast if [illegible] to be carried there.

Blame Lord Londonderry.

[illegible] of Agriculture Runciman, [illegible] who [illegible] the feeling aroused in [illegible] Lord Londonderry, [illegible] concern is now in his [illegible] inciting riot.

[illegible] now as if nothing can prevent [illegible] disturbance in Belfast the night of [illegible], as opposed to the 100,000 [illegible] argument, whom Lord Londonderry calls [illegible] to protest in Ulster Hall meeting [illegible] be 100,000 Nationalists who are determined to assert their right of free [illegible] and free speech.

[illegible] orders to the military and police to [illegible] by all classes of citizens. It may [illegible] the turning point of the entire campaign for home rule.

1,000 POLICEMAN MAY GO.

Wholesale Removals for Chicago Graft Expected.

CHICAGO, Jan. 20.—One thousand policemen must face charges and possible removal from Chicago's police force as the result of the graft investigation which the city Civil Service Commission has been making. A large number of commanding officers have already been removed.

TO INCREASE BIG GAME.

Plans Under Consideration by Maine Commission.

AUGUSTA, Me., Jan. 20.—J. S. P. H. Wilson of Auburn, chairman of the Maine Inland Fish and Game Commission, says that from reports received from guides in the various hunting districts of the State, he anticipates for the Fall and Winter of 1912 one of the most successful hunting seasons Maine has ever had. Big game is said to be wintering well and new legislation giving further protection to deer and moose will insure an increase in the supply of big game. Plans are now being developed to limit to one, instead of two, the number of deer to which a hunter is entitled in open season. Another form of regulation allowing each hunter two bucks and putting a continuous close time on doe is also under consideration.

Rabbi Ashinsky is a native of Poland.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—The Coffee Roaster Traffic and Pure Food Association to-day filed charges with the Department of Justice against what has been termed the "Coffee Trust." This new step in what is expected to develop into final prosecution of a world-wide coffee combination is an outgrowth of charges made by Representative Norris of Nebraska that a pool of coffee interests had abnormally raised the price of coffee 300 per cent. in the past five years.

NEW EFFORT TO STAY PHELPS' EXECUTION

Governor Foss Will To-day Make Appeal to Warden For Condemned Slayer.

[illegible] TO REOPEN [illegible]

Suspension of Penalty Until Wednesday Is Urged by Friends.

[illegible] will be met [illegible] Governor Foss [illegible] Phelps [illegible] pend until Wednesday the execution which is scheduled to take place shortly after 12 o'clock to-night.

Warden Bridges has all details ready [illegible] the witnesses prescribed by law and on that account wants to proceed.

Governor Foss will hold a conference with Warden Bridges to-day and it will be attended by Major Thomas L. Walsh of the Governor's staff, also with Attorney W. A. Davenport of Greenfield has been acting as counsel for Phelps.

The plea for the few days delay will be based upon the claim that the Executive Council only informally discussed the [illegible] Phelps [illegible] for commutation and that no formal vote was ever taken or decision rendered by the Council

Anxious to Reopen Case.

Attorneys Walsh and Davenport desire to reopen the case and to have the Governor's Council pass upon their petition Wednesday after hearing the wife and children of the condemned man and other witnesses. Certain letters of importance are said to have been overlooked.

Counsel for Phelps have already advanced such a vigorous argument that Governor Foss agreed after a long conference with Major Walsh yesterday afternoon to take up the matter with Warden Bridges to-day in person.

Major Walsh spent a long time with Phelps before he saw the Governor and he found his client anxious to live, but composed.

"Gee, I saw Governor Foss to-day," said Mayor Walsh last night, "and I also had a long talk with Phelps. I found him brave and confident that we could still save him. I believe for the first time about Richeson's case and how it evidently had an injurious effect upon his case, and he remarked patiently that he was sorry for that."

Respite Ended at Midnight.

The respite granted the Franklin county murderer ended at midnight last night. It is not considered likely that the Governor will again interfere in his behalf, the Executive Council having stood firm in its conviction that Phelps should go to the chair. There is a meeting of the council next Wednesday. By that time Phelps, it was announced last night, will have paid the penalty for his demands for first degree murder.

Under the law Warden Bridges might carry out the sentence of death just after the bell tolls midnight to-night.

Phelps within the past few days, since he learned that there was little chance of favorable action by the Executive Council on his plea for clemency, has written several letters to his wife urging her to exert every effort in his behalf. The unfortunate woman has found herself unable to do so. Broken down by the grief that has come into her life and by the worry of attending to her sick children, the oldest of whom is but twelve years of age, she has practically resigned herself to the inevitable. Her friends and she had given up all hope of saving her husband's life.

Visited By Chaplain.

Yesterday Phelps received three visits from the prison chaplain, Rev. Herbert W. Stebbins. To the chaplain he has frequently made pathetic references to his family. He is not penitent in the full religious sense of the word, it was said, for he still maintains that the shooting of Hanlon on June 12, 1910, was right. The guards said he was far from being reconciled with death.

More than once the doomed man has cried for his wife. "Oh, I wish I could raise enough money to bring her here," he exclaimed. "I'd want to see her once more." It is not probable he will ever see wife or children again. The last time he saw Mrs. Phelps was just before Christmas, since then kind-hearted Boston people have offered to pay the expenses of a trip to Boston for her, but she has refused because she did not think her frail family was equal to the trying ordeal of an interview at the prison.

Deputy Warden D. D. Allen saw Phelps in his cell yesterday, and inquired after his welfare, assuring the murderer that he could have the best of food for his meals. Phelps thanked him for the offer, save that he be permitted to keep his present plan, watch he smokes almost incessantly. He ate sparingly yesterday of two meals furnished from the prison diet-kitchen.

In addition to prison officials and guards there will be present at the electrocution Chaplain Stebbins; Dr. Joseph I McLaughlin, prison physician; Dr. Charles G. Porter, surgeon general of the State militia, or a physician designated by him; a medical examiner of Suffolk county, either Dr. George B. Magrath or Dr. The other Lears: Edson J. Pratt, high sheriff of Franklin County, or his deputy; Charles K. Richardson, keeper of the Franklin County jail at Greenfield, where Phelps was confined before he was brought to the State prison, and two other persons designated by Warden Bridges.

PITY MR. SEARLES, POOR MILLIONAIRE!

New Hampshire After the Tax-Dodger Who Left Massachusetts When T[illegible]

WHITHER NOW, PO[illegible] THING

Rated at $30,000,000, Paid on $66,000 at Methuen; None In New Hampshire.

[illegible] Searles, the $30,000,000 man [illegible] moved out of the State to [illegible] Methuen to Windham a couple of years ago, when Massachusetts Tax Commissioner William D. T. Trefry told the Methuen assessors to do their duty, has [illegible] more again. New Hampshire is [illegible] after him.

Mr. Searles is sixty-six years old now. He is almost a recluse. He buys up farm after farm. He builds castle after castle. He fences everything in like a corporation. He was extremely well liked in Methuen on his birthplace. He is not so popular in New Hampshire.

Searles's popularity or unpopularity in Windham has had nothing to do with getting the New Hampshire authorities after him. The move to get Mr. Searles to tax him for about what he is worth—instead of for a few thousands—is part of a State-wide agitation in the Granite State.

Taxation has been a live issue in New Hampshire for three or four years. Somebody got after the Boston & Maine Railroad. The railroad set up that it was being taxed for as much in proportion as the manufacturer, or the man who lives on his income. A commission traveled about the State looking into this. What the commission found was startling. Everybody seemed to be getting away with something except the little fellow who owned a cottage and lived in it.

Big Attorney on Board.

On the present tax commission are Albert O. Brown of Manchester, one of the big attorneys of the State, law partner of United States Senator Burnham; William B. Felows of Tilton, New Hampshire's leading authority on taxation, and John T. Amey of Lancaster, the big lumberman, who used to be chairman of the Democratic State Committee.

For the last three or four days the New Hampshire Tax Commission has been in session at Concord. There in the Capitol the commissioners have been holding a "school" for town officers.

All the assessors and all the selectmen of New Hampshire responded to the call of the Tax Commissioners except the Windham board, made up of Joseph W. Densmore, Walter C. Barker and Fred F. Webster.

For some reason or other—New Hampshire is guessing what it may be—the Windham officials failed to appear. Their absence from school directed attention to the fact that a $30,000,000 man lives among them.

Inquiry develops the additional fact that since Millionaire Searles moved his lares and penates across the State line he has been assessed in Windham on real estate only. New Hampshire has not collected a penny on his vast personal estate. Neither has Massachusetts.

Paying on $66,000.

Before Mr. Trefry got after the tax dodgers of Massachusetts Searles was paying at Methuen on $66,000 worth of "personal." He had given the town a school or two—one of them the handsomest in the world—and he had also built a church here and there. Methuen was content to let well enough alone. Mr. Trefry said it was against the law, unfair to other towns and unfair to men of wealth who paid their just taxes to the Commonwealth. When Mr. Trefry went to the courts about it the Methuen assessors threw up their hands and Mr. Searles moved.

New Hampshire threatens to be even more inhospitable to millionaires than Massachusetts has been. The Tax Commissioners have warned Secretary that this year every resident of the State must return a sworn inventory. If the Selectmen fail in their duty the Tax Commission will levy an assessment and seek an indictment of the town officials before the Grand Jury.

The Windham Board will levy its next assessment on Searles in April. Secretary Fellows said last night that if the Windham officials fail to act the Commissioners will [illegible]

Searles, whose father was a mill operative in Methuen, was working in the '70's for a New York firm of upholsterers. In 1881 he was sent to Great Barrington to direct the decorating of Mrs. Mark Hopkins's place. Mrs. Hopkins was the widow of the Southern Pacific Railroad king. She was seventy-one years old. Searles was thirty-five. They were married in 1887. Mrs. Searles died in 1891.

Since then Mr. Searles has been building palaces and fencing them in, and buying farms, and making presents to Methuen and saving his troubles with [illegible] officials. Where will he move to now?

Prize Beauty To Be a Bride

Cupid Wins "Prettiest Girl"

Salem Man the Groom-Elect

MISS HATTIE WURTELE, TO WED SALEM MAN

Miss Hattie Wurtele, who is known in many parts of the United States and Canada as the "Prettiest Girl in America," will marry Thomas J. Bois, secretary to the Mayor of Salem, Mass.

PUFF, PUFF! SMOKE IN CHARLES ST. JAIL

Our New Sheriff, Mr. Quinn, Will Allow Tobacco for an Hour Every Day.

Smoking, just an hour a day for a starter, is to be allowed prisoners in Charles Street Jail. This and a few other privileges will be put in force soon by John Quinn, Jr., the newly-appointed Sheriff.

Sheriff Quinn does not smoke. But he realizes that deprivation of tobacco is a hardship to man. He has observed that the majority of prisoners chew tobacco. The Sheriff sees that this does not conduce to cleanliness. He also knows that some of the prisoners would rather smoke than chew, if they had the chance.

So, as soon as his new duties permit, he will put in operation a smoking privilege and some other benefits for prisoners. Smoking will be allowed for [illegible] an hour at noon and a half hour [illegible] in the cells.

Another privilege will be an extension of the ball hours at night. Up to the present the time for getting bailed out at the jail expires at 10 p. m. Sheriff Quinn will extend this to 11 o'clock.

Sometimes it is necessary for the jail keeper to "double up" prisoners, or put two in a cell. When this is necessary care is to be taken that men in the same cell are not temperamentally unsuited to each other. That is, a man in full possession of his senses is not to be annoyed by having as a cell mate a man who is mentally incapacitated. The latter will be lodged by himself.

READY TO THROW BRICKS.

Mrs. Pankhurst Says American Women Aroused to That Point.

LONDON, Jan. 20. Thrilled by Mrs Pankhurst's report of woman suffrage progress in the United States militant suffragettes are preparing to renew their militant demonstrations on a larger scale than ever before attempted. It is understood that an organized campaign has been planned for simultaneous execution in Great Britain and Ireland and that the suffragettes will take the fullest advantage of the unrest over the home rule question.

In her most recent speech Mrs. Pankhurst said: "Our slogan in the States already ready to imitate us in throwing bricks. If there is no other way to secure their political liberty."

Thomas J. Bois, Secretary to the Mayor of Salem, Is the Lucky Man.

MANCHESTER, N. H., Jan. 20.—Next Monday, January 22, the "prettiest girl in America," Miss Hattie Wurtele, of No. 107 Elm street, Manchester, will become the bride of Thomas J. Bois, secretary to the Mayor of Salem, Mass.

In many parts of the United States and Canada where Miss Wurtele is known she is called the prettiest girl in America. Recently she won the prize winner in a beauty contest conducted by a Manchester daily newspaper in which thousands took part and in which the pictures of many hundreds of the most beautiful young women in New England were published.

The "prettiest girl" is prominently connected.

She is the daughter of Vivian C. Wurtele of St. David, Quebec, whose father was Johnsteen Wurtele, a Canadian poet. This distinguished Canadian statesman was a native of Wurtemberg, Germany. Olympe Pare, the other grandparent of Miss Wurtele, was an early French settler in Quebec.

Miss W[illegible] P[illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] Manchester, [illegible] her home with her mother, a well-to-do widow.

The lucky man to win Miss Wurtele is Thomas J. Bois, a prominent young resident of Salem, Mass. Mr. Bois is one of the best-known law students in the Witch City, and is better known among politicians and newspaper men as the private secretary to Mayor Rufus D. Adams.

The ceremony will take place in St George's Church, Manchester, and will be attended by many prominent people from New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Canada.

After a honeymoon to New York and Canada the young couple will reside in Salem, Mass.

STATE OF MANHATTAN.

Bills for Its Formation Call for the Taking of Greater New York.

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan 20. Two [illegible] State of Manhattan [illegible] New York and neighboring counties, are before the Legislature, having been introduced by one of the New York Assemblymen.

The bills are said to have strong support on the Democratic side.

CARDINAL MAY LEAVE CANOPIC AT QUARANTINE ON HIS RETURN

Committee Plans for Suitable Landing Where Boston Prelate May Be Welcomed by Citizens Without Crowding.

Magnificent Souvenir Album to Be Presented to Cardinal O'Connell at Big Laymen's Banquet at the Somerset

Men Prominent in the Boston Archdiocese Will Serve on the Reception Committees; Guests' Names Printed in Souvenir

ENTHUSIASTIC preparations are being completed every day for Boston's reception to Cardinal O'Connell. The plans of the various committees have already assumed such definite shape that the whole demonstration—or rather series of them—will be the most imposing of their nature ever seen in Boston.

While the matter has not yet gone beyond the point of suggestion, there is a feeling among the members of the committee on reception that instead of allowing the distinguished passenger to remain on board the Canopic until she docks, the cardinal and his suite should be taken off at quarantine and brought up to more convenient pier on the Atlantic avenue waterfront where a suitable landing can be made.

Members of the committee see in such an arrangement relief from the overcrowding and congestion which is certain to arise in the narrow streets surrounding the dock in Charlestown.

Nothing has been decided, however, about this suggestion which the committee will consider at a meeting nearer to the day of arrival.

The souvenir album which is to be presented to Cardinal O'Connell at the laymen's banquet in the Hotel Somerset on February 7, is now in process of manufacture. It will contain the full text of the addresses to be presented to the cardinal by the laymen of the diocese, and also the names of the guests at the banquet. Small duplicates of the souvenir will be presented to each man present at the dinner.

The address of congratulation will be printed in hand-illuminated manuscript and will be a beautiful specimen of art text work. The album will be contained in a mahogany case lined with white silk, with an inscribed plate on the cover.

Guests' Names in Souvenir.

As the time draws nearer for the cardinal's arrival the committee in charge of the laymen's banquet is anxious to close up all the details of arrangement as rapidly as possible. This applies especially to the committee. It is necessary that the album shall contain the name of every guest, but that [illegible] done it is necessary that all the names be known [illegible] The [illegible] to-day decided [illegible] of the [illegible] as follows.

If you Wish to Double the Beauty of your Hair in Ten Minutes surely Try a Danderine Hair Cleanse

Your hair becomes light, wavy, fluffy, abundant and appears a mass of soft, lustrous beautiful as a young girl's after a Danderine hair cleanse. Just try this—moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. This will remove the hair of dust, dirt and excessive oil, and in just a few moments you have doubled the beauty of your hair.

Wilson Eliminated, Nebraska Calls for a Party Realignment

OMAHA, Jan. 20.—Mayor James C. Dahlman has issued a call for [illegible] Democrats to confer on Presidential [illegible]

"Realizing that the statements of Colonel Watterson and Editor Harvey have made the nomination and election of Governor Wilson an impossibility, all precinct, county and district committeemen of the Democratic party in Nebraska are hereby invited to meet in Omaha, at a date soon to be announced, to talk matters over and take such action as will benefit the party and will prevent acrimonious dissensions, which can only injure the candidate who eventually is nominated.

"The meeting is called not in the interest of any particular candidate, but of the party in general.

"Without the support of such men as are now turning their backs upon Governor Wilson, no Democrat can hope to be elected President of this country, and with the elimination of Wilson as a possibility there must of necessity be a realignment of those Democrats who once supported his candidacy."

Lotta Crabtree Saves Horses from the Ice Provides Humane Fund for Chain Shoes

Always a Lover of Horses, But Never Liked Racing, Though She Owned Racers.

IS NOW IN BUSINESS HERE

By F. J. McISAAC.

If there hadn't been a dancing school in the village of La Porte, California, away back in 1855, the horses in the vicinity of Boylston street and Park square would still be slipping on the icy pavements instead of plodding along in safety, wearing emergency chain shoes.

There doesn't seem much connection between these events, does there? but there is, and it is Lotta Crabtree.

Miss Charlotte Crabtree, to-day a gracious lady of means, owner of a theatre and a big hotel which she manages herself, but Lotta to the older generation of theatre-goers, the most famous of all American comediennes.

It was Lotta Crabtree, looking out the window of her apartments in the Hotel Bonner and seeing an overladen horse fall, who was inspired to provide funds to buy chain shoes for all the horses which get into difficulties in that neighborhood.

And if it hadn't been for that village dancing school to which girls were admitted free—but Lotta is going to tell us about that herself in good time.

It is little things like the falling horse incident that result in that one of America's greatest actresses is still in our midst, active and happy, and conducting a great business in thoroughly competent fashion, for Lotta does not seek the limelight; she is quite willing to be forgotten.

Twenty years ago, in the height of her popularity and her prime as an actress she vanished from the stage. And nothing could induce her to go back. She had made a fortune and she wanted to enjoy it, and the footlights had no more charm. That is the only explanation she has ever given of her sudden retirement.

To most of us who were children when she retired after a career of thirty years, it would seem as though Lotta were very old, but she isn't, that is the most delightful part of all. She is as lively and vivacious as ever, just as amusing and in appearance hardly beyond middle age.

My appointment with Miss Crabtree was for 10 in the morning, a very early hour for a woman of leisure and wealth to expect to see anybody. But when I entered Lotta's study it was evident that the morning was well underway there.

She stood snidling by her desk, and such a desk, a mass of papers, bills, invoices, and miscellany such as would make the head ache of an accomplished accountant.

"I am very dilatory this morning," said Miss Crabtree. "In the Winter one does not like to rise very early. It was long after 8 when I got up."

HALF PAST SIX HER BREAKFAST HOUR.

"And may I ask what you consider a proper hour for rising?"

"Half past six," said Miss Crabtree. "I am always up and at breakfast at that hour when the weather is good. I have so much to do. You see, I am a business woman. Oh, not by choice, for I detest business. My idea of happiness is to have nothing to do but interest myself in art and music. Yet here I am keeping a hotel."

She shrugged her shoulders, and threw out her hands and bent her head to one side like a bird.

They say you have to see a woman in the morning to know what she really looks like. This was morning and Lotta looked all right. With her red-brown hair, and dancing eyes, and slender figure, I would be willing to swear that she wasn't 64 at all, but Lotta's daughter, if I didn't know that she had none, in fact never married.

"I got drawn into hotel keeping just as I did into horse racing, which I detest. Does that surprise you? Well, it is true. I do not approve of horse racing, because I love horses so much. Yet I once had a stable in which were some of the fastest horses in the country.

"How I did love those horses, and how they loved me. There is just as much character in horses as there is in men. Some have great dignity and pride. I had one in which was a most remarkable. It would be put to a sulky, dance well in it, or prance in front of a carriage. It was a wonderful horse, but I hated to sell it. It was intended always to be a pet. I knew they were dancing when it came to a waltz. The rhythm of it as I would go into my room and pull down the shades.

"But my race horses were happy. They were wonderfully well kept, and everybody was so kind to them. I would not have sold them had I not known that the fact that they rest so much more than other horses is good treatment.

"I do not think that many people who follow the race track really love horses. They are in it for the money they make.

"That is why it pained me to see the poor horses slipping and dropping on the asphalt pavements. America is a blessed rural country as horses.

"Here in our cities we pave our streets with smooth substances, and that those who ride in automobiles can be saved from jouncing, and with never a thought of the horses. Then the poor animals are forced to drag heavy loads up grades over roads so smooth that they cannot possibly get a footing

"I MAKE GESTURES LIKE A FRENCHMAN."

"But is why I rejoice every time an automobile is substituted for a horse, for that means another poor animal is saved from misery."

Lotta had been talking vehemently and helping her tongue with her hands. She stopped and laughed, apologetically. "I make as many gestures as a Frenchman, don't I?" she demanded. "It is strange, because our family has been English for many generations back. I think somewhere in the dark ages I must have had a Latin ancestor, because I have always been so vivacious. It helps me on the stage."

"I wonder how I looked when I left the stage. I haven't the faintest idea, for I keep no run of time."

"Nearly twenty years, but I try!"

"I shouldn't wonder. You never wanted to go back?"

Never. You see I didn't pick out a stage career like a profession. I just dropped into it. When I was a very little child I used to sing and dance on the head of my mother's piano. One of them. Really, I had a remarkable career."

"You should write your memoirs."

"How can I? I am so busy. I have so many genius to carry out. I think they would be interesting. I can summon up pictures now and then. I saw the opera, 'The Girl of the Golden West,' the other day. It reminded me of youth. Well can I remember the log cabin saloon with its bar and its dance hall and its gambling tables.

"None of those singers looked like a girl like a western girl of the period. I was such a girl. Why, the scene of the opera is laid in California, about 1850.

"It was in a little log theatre in California in 1855 that I made my debut at the age of five."

Lotta leaned back and half closed her eyes. "I can see the pictures of our little village. We lived in a log cabin, my father, my mother and I, in Petaluma. My father had gone seeking gold, but he didn't have any success and we were very poor.

"An Italian, whose name I have forgotten, a dancing teacher in La Porte in the village. He was a fine old man, music and dancing. He established a dancing school for the children of the settlers. The boys had to pay, but the girls were allowed to come free. That is how I was enabled to go. You know there were so few girls in the village that I was very welcome."

For [illegible] I went to a little [illegible] school. Then he opened a [illegible] with [illegible] and I wanted too much for his theatre and [illegible] a dime to [illegible] for her [illegible] more. This made him furious and he decided to give an opposition show.

He called upon my mother and asked her if I might appear. I was only seven years old. My mother said certainly not. Why the child could not do anything that would entertain people."

"Oh, I think!" said the Italian. "Come Lotta, come." Then I stood up and well, things the dances he had taught me. I made a complete [illegible] on that [illegible] I sang a song and [illegible] I don't sang a song and [illegible] I sang a song and [illegible]

I remember the night of my debut. The room was full of miners. There were cowboys [illegible] and the room smelled strongly of [illegible] smoke. I stepped bravely out. When I was through they poured applause on so much that I was terrified and they threw [illegible] nuggets of gold.

I ran [illegible] for breath. She was excited and her eyes were shining as they [illegible] those shoes that night in [illegible] Field, the first [illegible] triumph was sweeter to her than her greater successes in [illegible] cities.

THE WASTER

By HERBERT KAUFMAN

Don't tell us what you have—show us what you have done. Don't point out what you own, but demonstrate what you have achieved through your own efforts.

You're no more responsible for inherited wealth than for herited health.

It requires exactly the same amount of brains to fall into a fortune that it takes to fall into a puddle.

You're not a big figure because you figure in big sums. Your actual size is indicated by your achievements.

The dollar mark can't make you a man of mark.

What have you created—what did you give the world that it never before possessed—with what ideas have you fertilized advancement—what enthusiasms have you aroused—what have you done to make us hope harder or strive farther—what seed of inspiration have you planted—what fight have you fought in the name of the common good?

Of all the citizens of the Republic you're the least essential. The scavenger, the digger of sewers, the rat catcher and the street sweeper are far more essential to the community. They are doing their level best to help—you make no attempt. You're a drone—an eater in the hive—you neither spread pollen nor gather honey—you're a waster—a falsity of civilization.

In an elder day you would be forced to demonstrate your worth or surrender what you are worth to your more husky and active betters.

The Almanach de Gotha, Burke's Peerage and D[illegible] ceased to hold significance with the abolition of [illegible] caste."

When men dueled [illegible] when coats-of-arms were worn upon the battlefield and not upon limousine doors—when the lusty and militant could command respect—when caste was the guerdon of valor—when bravery and service alone could confer distinction—you would have been a sutler or a camp follower.

A first-class, normal, red-blooded male has never at any period in history been an idler.

Do something! [illegible] and learn the self-respect that can only come [illegible]

You're not a real human—you're a puppet—a play actor in the great comedy of Self.

Nature never intended that there should be [illegible]

By the law of survival, by the process of [illegible] have been eliminated by nature, [illegible]

Some near ancestor of yours must have possessed sufficient energy and common-sense—a hard enough head [illegible] hands to earn what you spend!

Arthur Cutten, a Canadian, Is Skilfully Bulling the Corn Market.

CHICAGO, Jan. 20.—It is generally believed in Chicago wheat circles that there is still a large operation in the May futures and that A. J. Lichstein is the principal bushr of that month. "Nothing Succeeds Like Circulation"

Again Leads the World

The Los Angeles Examiner's Advertising Gain Exceeds That of Any Other Newspaper Published

During the Year of 1911, the Los Angeles Examiner Printed

89,724 Inches or 4486.20 Columns

More Advertising Than During 1910

This Gain Was Distributed as Follows:

Local Display Advertising Gain, 60,837 Inches, or 3041.85 Columns
Foreign Display Advertising Gain, 16,837 Inches, or 841.85 Columns
Classified Advertising Gain, - - 12,050 Inches, or 602.50 Columns

This is the third successive year the Los Angeles Examiner has achieved this triumph—having made the greatest advertising gain ever made by any newspaper in the world in one year during 1909, over 1908, viz: 6705½ columns; followed in 1910 by the greatest gain over 1909, of any newspaper in the world, viz: 6070⅘ columns.

This record-breaking volume of advertising of 1911 and the startling gain it shows over the previous year are significant, not only of the tremendous circulation and prestige of the Los Angeles Examiner, but as a reflection of the business energy and enterprise which is making Los Angeles one of the greatest cities of the United States.

This steadily increasing advertising patronage attests the confidence which advertisers have in the pulling power of the Examiner. IT BRINGS RESULTS! They know it is not only the greatest newspaper of Southern California—but the greatest champion of Southern California—that it assists and forwards the progress of the Southwest and is identified with every movement looking to the great future. The Examiner believes in Los Angeles and Los Angeles believes in the Examiner.

Any newspaper's influence is measured by the magnitude of its family of readers. That is why the Examiner, leading them all in circulation, brings best RESULTS to advertisers and it is because it does bring these results that year after year its advertising shows sensational and unbroken gains.

HE period of time covered by history is far too short to allow of any perceptible progress in the popular sense of evolution of the human species. The notion that there has been any such progress since Caesar's time is too absurd for discussion. All the savagery, barbarism, dark ages and the rest of it of which we have any record as existing in the past exists in the present. There is clearly room for great changes in the world by increasing the percentage of individuals who are carefully bred and gently nurtured, even to finally making the most of every man and woman born. But that possibility existed in the days of the Hittites as much as it does to-day. It does not give the slightest real support to the common assumption that the civilized contemporaries of the Hittites were unlike their civilized descendants to-day.—George Bernard Shaw.

ND the greatest of the contemporaries of the Hittites were the Egyptians of the fourteenth century B. C. The poet or seer often anticipates the discoveries of science, and thus Shaw has seen what the archaeologists digging in the sands of Egypt prove only after lengthy investigation. The Egyptians, especially the princes and priests, lived in an atmosphere of civilization easily comparable to the best of our time.

The latest discovery of a wonderfully carved head of Queen Tiy, together with many other relics of the civilization of her age, goes far toward proving the truth of Shaw's statements, showing the remarkable mode of life, of thought and of worship of thirty-four centuries ago.

This beautiful head of the wonderful Queen was not recovered from her tomb, opened by Mr. Theodore M. Davis, of New York, only a few years ago, but has only lately been acquired by the German Oriental Society, which has been conducting excavations in Egypt at several places. This head was not found by the excavators of the society, but was uncovered by one of the natives, and purchased by the agent of the society, who traced up the place of its discovery, and there found other remains bearing on the time and life of this remarkable Queen Tiy.

Tiy was not of royal descent. In fact, she was taken from the people, on account if her beauty and wonderful intelligence, and it is probably due to her humbler origin that she brought to the royal palace a power which the worn Pharaohs lacked. She became the Queen of Amenophis III., and, what is far more to the point, the mother of Amenophis IV., the great Reformer.

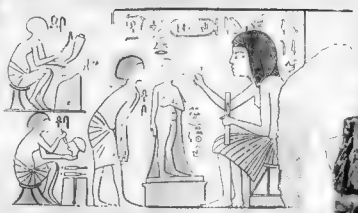
It was her son who introduced the worship of the Sun-Disk, as near an approach to pure Monotheism, or the worship of the One God, as was possible at that time and place.

Her son it was who effaced from the monuments the figure of Amon the great chief of Egypt's deities, and even changed his name from Amenophis ("Amon is Satisfied") to Akhnaton ("Pious to Aton") the Sun-Disk. He abandoned the ancient capital, Thebes, and established his capital at Amarna, in whose ruins have been found the only records of the international correspondence between Egypt and Babylonia on many tablets, written in the Cuneiform text of Babylonia.

We can now, in the light of the latest discoveries, be present and spend a day with Queen Tiy, seeing what she does, how she lives and how the day passes for this illustrious personage.

As the rays of the sun enter the palace window Queen Tiy rises hastily from her bronze bed, throws a gown about her and makes her prostrations before the Great Emanation of the One God.

Her servitors are at hand with milk and honey and wheaten bread for the Queen's first breakfast. All is spread upon an ebony table, and the spoons are of ivory and gold. The Queen drinks from a glass goblet, for it was at this time that glass was first introduced into Egypt, and none save royalty could afford to have it.



AN EGYPTIAN WALL PAINTING SHOWING QUEEN TIY POSING FOR HER STATUE. ON EACH SIDE A PORTRAIT BUST OF HER.

And then, drawing her robe about her, the Lady Tiy reclines upon a couch, whose legs are of carved ivory, while her maids prepare to make her toilet.

They bring her robes and tunics, and at last she selects her morning garb. The hairdresser brings out an elaborate wig, the maids rub her with highly perfumed unguents, and finally the Queen is ready for her morning's work.

The devoted son, Akhnaton, approaches to pay his respects to the Queen Mother, and she hears from him that another temple is being built in her honor, and she urges him forward in the good work.

It is time now for the business of the day, and Queen Tiy is a very busy woman. She receives her superintendents and overseers, and hears reports of the progress of the work in the temples and on her extensive estates, for she leaves only the details to her men, but all must be reported to her. Tiy is satisfied with some of the reports, but to one or two of the overseers she gives warning that crops must be better and more work done, or——

And now it is time for the real breakfast, and the slaves bring in a table spread with the finest linen, bearing a service of gold and ivory, and there is a fine fish from the Lake of Moeris and some eggs of the wild fowl, especially gathered for the Queen. Fatigued by the work already done, she eats with appetite, that she may continue her work. Sometimes her husband joins her at this meal, for it is his luncheon hour.

No sooner is the table taken away than tiring women enter to show the Queen the latest beautiful weavings, that she may order new robes. Here was scarlet and purple and striped stuffs, out of which the flowing skirts were to be fashioned.

"They are wearing the skirts a little fuller now," says one of the women; and the Queen orders her new robe made in the latest fashion, for who should be well dressed if it be not the Queen! Turning over all the cloths, she makes her selection and sends the rest away, for now the court sculptor is announced.

He has come for a sitting that he may fashion a statue of his Queen to adorn the new temple. He moulds it skilfully in clay, in miniature at first, so as not to tire the royal sitter. Then later he will enlarge the figure and come once again to put on the finishing touches, that the statue may be perfect. Replicas will be made of the miniature, in clay and in stone, for various gifts, for at that time the statue was used both as an offering to the gods and as our modern visiting cards.

At last the noonday meal is served, and Queen Tiy sits down to a regal meal of ducks and geese, of beef and gazelle, with all the vegetables of the season—lentils, peas, beans, radishes, onions and even lettuce. She has both wine and barley beer on the table, and for dessert there are cakes made of dates and pomegranates to tempt the queenly appetite.

The dinner dispatched, the tiring women relieve the Queen of her heavier garments and, putting on a flowing wrapper, Queen Tiy lies down upon her couch for her needed nap. Slaves waft the air toward her while her majesty reposes.

Rested after an hour, the Queen visits her spinning women to see that they, too, are busy with their flax, and, once more attired in more brilliant colors, she awaits the visit of her son. He enters to take afternoon tea with his mother and talk over the affairs of the kingdom, for she is his trusted adviser. But the tea is not like ours—it is an aromatic brew of herbs, and there are cakes, too, for the informal meal.

One or two of the family, the wife of Akhnaton and his daughters, including the beautiful Beketaton (maid-servant of Science Finds, in a Mysterious Wholesale Visitation of Death Among Berlin Outcasts, Nature's Plan to Purify the Race by a Specific Bacillus.

A New Germ that Destroys Only the "Unfit."

"Am I My Brother's Keeper?"

The Painting by J. C. Dollman, of the British Royal Academy, Which Shows a Group of Miserables Made Unfit by Social Conditions, Sleeping in Trafalgar Square, London.

AFTER a charity meal on Christmas evening upward of one hundred tramps in a Berlin municipal refuge were smitten with a dreadful unknown disease. Seventy-five of them died, some after attacks lasting as short a time as fifteen minutes.

The terrible visitation of death has brought to light a scientific theory that is nothing less than awe-inspiring.

The theory is that these deaths were part of nature's plan to eliminate by a specific bacillus the physically and mentally unfit from the human race.

Professor Caffky, of the Royal Institute for Infectious Diseases of Berlin, and other distinguished scientists have found that the outbreak was due to the "bacillus botulinus," a newly discovered and still rare bacillus that attacks the physically unfit and degenerate. The bacillus was discovered by Dr. Ermenghem of Ghent, and the first outbreak of disease due to it was noted at Darmstadt in 1904.

It is true that the Berlin police have stated that the outbreak was due to wood alcohol poisoning, but the symptoms were not those of this malady, and it seems absurd to suppose that every one of these poor tramps had been drinking wood alcohol. The supposition that it was an outbreak of the black plague has also been rejected.

Upon the presence of the botulinus bacillus is based the belief that this is a disease working for the purification of the race. The theory is not entirely new, and many scientists have made researches bearing upon it. Dr. R. G. Eccles, of Brooklyn, a well-known medical investigator and writer, has recently published a pamphlet designed to show that disease plays the principal part in the Darwinian "survival of the fittest," rather than environment, as hitherto understood.

"Disease germs are the principal factors in producing and developing species, according to Dr. Eccles. Man is being improved by disease. The author quotes many modern scientists in support of his views.

Dr. Eccles discussed the Berlin epidemic with a representative of this newspaper and agreed that it might be a factor in purifying the human race.

"This bacillus," he said, "is more deadly than that of cholera. To it must be ascribed many of the cases erroneously reported from time to time as cases of ptomaine poison.

"The bacillus botulinus does not produce a ptomaine, but a toxin—a deadly poison, which is readily dissolved by the gastric juices, and at once invades the whole nervous system. When the germs are present in great quantities death comes very quickly—within from fifteen minutes to twenty-four hours.

"This germ thrives on protein—a substance contained in the lean of meat, the white of egg, the casein of milk and the gluten of wheat. It does not originate in those substances, but is undoubtedly communicated by physical contact with a carrier of the germs.

"Many of us may carry around this bacillus and communicate it to foods we touch without in any way feeling any ill effects ourselves. If we are sufficiently strong, mentally and physically, to throw off the poison generated by the germ, we go unscathed.

"But the physically unfit and ill-nourished have not this resisting power and readily succumb to the toxin. Among the poor, this bacillus is a far greater menace than with the more prosperous, for it is the poor who have to live largely on 'left-overs.'

"A piece of beef upon which ten per cent. of these bacilli exist may be eaten to-day without any ill effects but if part of this meat is left over and kept till to-morrow the germs are given a chance to multiply, which they do very quickly. One germ to-day may produce 40,000 germs to-morrow.

"Of the articles of food most commonly eaten, meringue pie, Charlotte Russe, mince pie, canned meats, meats and fish are most apt to carry the bacillus botulinus. As far as canned goods are concerned there is no danger, unless the can is bulging or has a hole in it.

"The spread of this disease can best be prevented by the general adoption of habits of personal cleanliness. Typhoid, cholera and scarlet fever, as well as the dreadful disease following the introduction of the bacillus botulinus into the system, are undoubtedly communicated from person to person and from person to food."

The conclusion that the outbreak forms part of nature's plan to purify the race starts with the observation of great improvements that have occurred in animal and vegetable races after prolonged attacks of certain germ diseases.

As far as the human race is concerned, it finds itself just now in especial need of a purifying agent. Since the growth of the large cities and great cities in Europe there has arisen an enormous class of physically and mentally unfit persons, including tramps, criminals and slum dwellers.

In older times constant wars, capital punishment for every serious offense and wholesale outbreaks of disease purified the population. To-day war has become uncommon, capital punishment takes no lives worth speaking of, and medical and sanitary science have greatly diminished the deaths from epidemic.

But this new discovery shows that however much man may struggle against the principle of "the survival of the fittest," nature will find new ways of asserting this principle.

The unfit have vastly increased in number from other causes besides modern science and humanity. They are mostly incapable of good hard work, unable to think, largely stamped by congenital criminality. If permitted to increase, they would poison the whole body of society. Merciless nature furnishes the remedy in the form of a new disease which attacks only the unfit and which they can hardly avoid. These persons are said to be in a state of inebriety, in which the new germ finds them easy victims.

Note a extraordinary fact that the poison of the bacillus botulinus attacks first of all the spinal cord and brain. Thus it happens that a man of good mental power, though physically delicate, would probably resist the disease, while a mentally unfit person, though comparatively robust, would succumb.

The scene in the Berlin municipal lodging house when the outbreak began beggared anything described in Dante's "Inferno" or pictured in Holbein's "Dance of Death."

There were 4,000 people in the shelter at the time, and more were clamoring to get in on account of the bitter cold weather.

The trouble began on the afternoon following the Christmas supper. Some of the inmates became suddenly doubled up with pain. They turned purple, vomited terrible and complained of severe pains in the head.

Many of the victims died within fifteen minutes of the first appearance of the symptoms. In other cases death occurred in various periods, not exceeding twenty-four hours. The faeces of the bacillus botulinus in the intestines of the dead men were in many cases very slight, showing how easily this germ killed

When the authorities realized that an epidemic was raging they refused to let any of the inmates leave the shelter for fear that they would spread contagion through the city. This produced a climax of horror.

The poor wretches became crazy with fear. They clamored and cried in vain to be let out. From time to time one of them would be attacked by the disease and immediately carried away to the isolation hospital before the eyes of his terror-stricken companions.

In assuming that the disease might be contagious the authorities were largely right. The bacillus botulinus is contagious in the sense that typhoid fever is. The germ may easily be carried to the mouth by the hand which has touched an infected object.

It was ascertained that the source of infection came principally from a supply of very cheap meat fish known as "Bismarck herring," which had been sold in the streets of Berlin before the outbreak to five for a penny. Many of the poor tramps had eaten this. It is also probable that the germ came from other sources, as it occur in almost any kind of food.

Outbreaks of the disease, which could not have spread from the municipal shelter, occured at many places in and around Berlin. Other cases have been reported from in other large cities in various parts of Europe

Aton), and in their palanquins they go for a royal progress through the new capital, Akhetaton, described as "great in loveliness, mistress of pleasant ceremonies, rich in possessions, the offerings of Re in her house."

Returning to her royal residence, Queen Tiy yields herself once more to her maids, and is garbed more gorgeously than ever in evening robes, for many of the nobility are bidden for the entertainment of that night.

She partakes of a collation of pigeons, quails, ostrich flesh, with vegetables and fruits, and the finest of wines, and glowing after her day's work she passes to the Royal Gallery, there to view the statues of her ancestors and friends, for this is the custom of her day.

There is readiness now in the great hall for the fast-coming guests.

As they enter the guests present their visiting cards in the shape of beautifully carved statuettes of themselves, all of which are received by the servitors and put away in cabinets of ebony. The feast is glorious, and when the guests are called to the supper hall they find the board groaning with ducks and geese, quails and pigeons, and a whole ostrich in full plumage stands high above all.

The feast is over at last, and as the guests, having bowed low to Queen Tiy and her son Akhnaton, leave the palace each receives a statuette of the Queen, in varying material according to his rank, for the Queen can pay no visits, and this is her way of returning their calls.

The day is done—a full day indeed, and Akhnaton having gone to his palace, Queen Tiy is ready to have her maids relieve her of robes of state, and lull her to slumber by soothing melodies.

How to Give Your Little Daughter a Perfect Figure

THIS is the fourth of a series of practical lessons on health and grace especially prepared for the users of paper by Miss F. Christian Miller, F. C. I., the famous English health expert.

By F. Christian Miller, F.C.I.

GIVE me the young girl for four years of her life—I should prefer that they be between fourteen and eighteen—and I will guarantee her a perfect figure.

By plenty of fresh air and well-directed exercises, adapted to her particular needs, by regular meals and regular rest, she can be made to develop into a straight, strong, young creature, fine and erect as a sturdy sapling.

There must be something seriously faulty in the physical training of the rising generation, when, according to the opinion of medical specialists, nearly every second girl has a crooked figure. It is indisputable that in spite of the growing popularity of the gymnasium, curvature of the spine is becoming more general. The increasing tendency to this particular deformity in growing girls is due to lack of proper physical training.

The Conn Institute and its fellows are opposed to gymnasium training for women. It denies the value of apparatus. Indian clubs and dumbbells we are convinced by their abuse do vastly more harm than the good that is derived from their proper use. We believe in light, gentle exercises prescribed for each individual case. There is no physical culture, curesall, as there is no drug panacea to medical science has ever known.

We go in for training and in watching. We will do the training, but the mother must do the watching. It is the mother's jealous eye which must be trained to detect. It is the mother's jealous care which can prevent. If the muscles for keeping the spine erect were properly developed, curvature of the spine, due to muscular weakness, would be impossible.

Instead of this practical preventive work being made compulsory at schools, girls return to their homes to be constantly admonished by their parents to hold themselves up. When this has failed of the desired result, and the mother seeks advice because one hip is growing out and one shoulder is higher than the other, she is comfortingly told that the young girl will "grow out of it." The truth is she never grows out of it. If she is very fortunate the slight deformity may go no further, especially if she is not growing too quickly and leads an active, largely out-of-door life, but much oftener she "grows into it."

The latter stage, when told that she "will grow out of it," may lead to the second stage, when a cumbrous steel jacket or a plaster cast is ordered, and so leads to the third stage, when the helpless mother realises that, instead of "growing out of it," her child has grown into such hopeless deformity that no set of exercises will help her to grow straight again.

With regard to lateral curvature of the spine unassociated with disease, many cases have yielded in the beginning to exercises.

But these extreme operations can be, in most cases, prevented by the watchfulness of the mother in compelling the child to properly sit or stand. The young girl must be trained to sit, not to lounge. If she is so tired that she cannot sit straight she is tired enough to lie down. She should sit in a comfortable way, with the balls of her feet flat upon the floor and her spine straight. She should stand with the weight of her body evenly divided between the two limbs, the knees straight, the chest forward, the abdomen flat.

By simple exercises, daily taken, the muscles at the back of the neck can be so strengthened that the head will rest gracefully and naturally upon the neck without stiffness. One excellent exercise for this purpose is simply bending the head back and forth, stretching the larger, heavy muscles at the back of the neck and strengthening them. Another is to twist the head slowly, resting it first on one shoulder, then another.

The training is invaluable, for the head held erectly helps to straighten the spine. It raises the chest to that proud, self-confident position that is so attractive in woman. The height is considerably increased and the lungs have their chance to develop.

Deep breathing is the most helpful of these means. The true method of breathing is so little understood that many persons who conscientiously practice deep breathing exercises are remarkable for their flat chests and enlarged abdomens. We do not believe in abominal breathing. It is our belief that the diaphragm need not be called into play for sufficient breathing. Insensible from abdominal breathing to the enlarged abdomen so disfiguring to the female form.

Nature has given us magnificently sufficient muscles for supporting and balancing the figure. These lie across the abdomen and are strong and elastic as the stoutest of India rubber.

If abdominal muscles were properly strengthened, abdominal enlargement, which mars the most promising figure, would never be seen, and elastic belts and certain corsets, thought to correct this evil, would never be needed.

Your own system of exercises for correcting this blemish of the figure can be worked out, but a very young girl should have guidance. She should be taught that any exercise which causes contraction of the muscles of the abdomen is valueless. These exercises lace, so to speak, the natural corset, of which I have written before as which is formed by the strong muscles overlying the abdomen.

Bending slowly back and forth from a sitting position is one of the best exercises. Sit erect in your chair. Then lean forward until the face is on a level or between the knees. Then return to the original posture and repeat.

The exercise of the imaginary lifting of a heavy weight is valuable. The weight must be imaginary, however. For the girl who would lift a heavy weight at any time, in any circumstance. Place your hands beneath a desk or table and pretend to lift it.

The drawing of a cork from an imaginary bottle, held between the knees, is another exercise which causes contraction of the muscles and prevents the disfiguring, baggy appearance about the middle of the body.

Stooping from the waist, keeping the knees unbent and picking up real or imaginary objects from the floor is a fourth valuable exercise in this direction.

Besides causing the abdomen to be straight and flat these exercises improve the complexion. By their contraction the muscles press upon the liver, increasing the circulation necessary to its perfect health. When the liver is sluggish there is a congestion and enlargement of the abdomen. Stirring the liver to its right activity relieves these. Inaction, too, will be relieved by these exercises.

WANT "GIRLIE?"—ONE YEAR AT HARD LABOR!

How Rich but Ingenious Papa Brown Frightens Off Daughter's Fashionable Suitors--Or Turns Them Into Perfectly Unattractive Working Men

MR. JAMES BROWN, father of the beautiful "Girlie" Brown, bids fair to keep his beautiful daughter under his own roof tree for an indefinite period.

Cupid has a strenuous time trying to carry off the pretty girl whose Christian name is Angelica. Cupid casts an arrow at her many times each season, but what can Cupid do against a hard-hearted father who says:

"Howdy do, Cupid? See that woodpile? Well, get busy on that first!"

And these Browns are of New York's and Newport's smartest set. Papa Brown counting his wealth in millions!

Just think of a modern father, a father of a very modern young woman, making Cupid work for a living! It seems unbelievable, but it is only too true. There is an old camp-meeting hymn which reads, "Sure I must work if I would win." And this is what the suitors of the beautiful "Girlie" hear when they approach the stern parent.

"So you want to marry my daughter?" says Papa Brown. "Sure you may have her if you work for her."

And it makes no difference whether the man is wealthy or poor. Whether he will inherit millions or nothing. Work he must!

"Must we work seven years for Girlie?" whine the men. "Must we serve for her as Jacob served for Rachel?"

No, this is not necessary. One year at hard labor is all that is necessary. Just imagine what this means to the gilded masculine butterflies. Twelve months of real work! Fifty-two weeks!! Three hundred odd days!!! Twenty-five hundred hours!!!

Miss Angelica came out four years ago. She was the blonde beauty of her year. Her success was assured from the first. "Girlie will marry money," said all her friends. "Girlie shall marry money!" said Mama Brown, who was a daughter of Quartley, the artist.

But Papa Brown, like the Tar Baby, sat back and said nothing. Girlie received lots of attention. Some of it very serious. Cyril Hatch, Harold Vanderbilt, Bobby Bacon, even Roger Wetmore, cast sheep's eyes at her. But suddenly they all drifted off, went their several ways, but refused to tell the reasons for the cooling of their ardor.

In the light of recent events it is easy to know why the luckless lovers fled. Just imagine the gay and sportive Mr. Wetmore working! Just imagine the debonair Mr. Hatch laboring! The idea is preposterous. Mr. Vanderbilt was never serious anyway, for he is and forever will be Eleanor Fearn's property.

Then up bobbed Maurice Burke-Roche, one of the famous twins. All day and every day he devoted him self to Girlie. He danced with her, motored with her, walked with her. He sent her violets every morning and brought her sweetmeats every afternoon.

Was there ever such a cruel father? Work! Why, the rosy-cheeked, blue eyed Maurice had never worked in his life. Not even at college—but that is another tale. As the prospective heir of his grandfather, Frank Work of course Maurice was bound to inherit a few millions. There was no reason for him to work and he had never even flirted with the stern visaged damsel.

He trembled in his patent leather boots. "Work! Why, Mr. Brown, do you mean that I must really work? Really earn a salary?"

"I do indeed!" said Papa Brown. "The man who marries Girlie must know how to work! No matter who his sisters, his cousins or his aunts may be, he must work!"

But he really wanted to marry Girlie and he pondered long on the subject. Twelve months at hard labor!" he gasped. "Well, I can try any way!"

So he got a real job in an express office over in Hoboken. Did he not prove his earnestness? Hoboken! From Fifth avenue to Hoboken! He had to punch the time clock at 9 o'clock every morning and at 5:30 o'clock every afternoon.

Until this servitude began young Mr. Burke-Roche's greatest labor had been to see that his neckties and silk socks matched. He used to rise at 10 a. m., have chocolate and toast served in his rooms at 10:30 o'clock, himself garbed in a silken robe, flowers perfuming the atmosphere and the sense of cold cream allaying all.

He began to work. He got up at 7 o'clock, had breakfast at 7:30, hustled down to the ferry, caught the 8 o'clock boat, tore madly through Hoboken streets at 8:45, and at 9 punched the clock. Then he worked until 12, punched the clock again and chased out for a quick lunch. Oh, what a change! An order of cakes and bacon, perhaps; or perhaps beans and coffee. Would his friends at the exclusive Brook Club recognize him?

At 1 p. m. another punch at the clock and more work until 5:30. Then the last punch and a quick getaway for home and Girlie!

But there are always many sides to any love affair. Papa Brown had reasons all his own for making Girlie's suitors work. He was not merely trying to improve the morals and transform the masculine butterflies. No, indeed! He wanted to test the love of the two young people. While Maurice was working from 9 until 5:30 o'clock, Girlie was enjoying all the good things of life. She was receiving violets and attentions from the other men in her set and if her love for Maurice was not the real thing she would naturally forget him.

He would be too tired at night to dance like the other men. He could not stay up until daylight and get to work at 9 o'clock in Hoboken.

Perhaps he would forget Girlie. See Papa Brown in the background watching his puppets!

Time passed. Girlie found her love growing cold. Mama Brown packed her trunks and took Girlie off to Egypt, for mamma favored Maurice. "In Egypt she will forget the others and remember only Maurice," said mama. Papa Brown grinned. "Not if I'm right in the way I reasoned it out," said he to himself.

Off to Egypt they went and stayed there many months. Queer things happened! Frank Work died leaving a most extraordinary will. Perhaps Maurice would not inherit those millions after all!

Girlie and mama returned to New York. Girlie wept and said she was sorry, but she could not marry Maurice. She wept some more and said: "And oh, how hard you've worked, too."

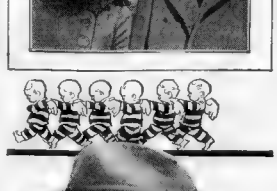
Maurice was sad, but habit is strong. He kept on working. And he is working to this very day. And in Hoboken, too!

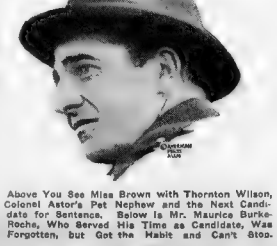
And there is another aspirant for Girlie's fair hand. Thornton Wilson, the youngest son of the Orme Wilsons and Jack Astor's pet nephew, is courting the fairy girl. Young Wilson has a fine future. He will inherit many of the Astor millions. His mother was Caroline Astor, Mrs. Astor's youngest daughter. His father is the oldest son of the late Richard T. Wilson, a multi-millionaire.

Thornton has been "rushing" Girlie for months. He is very much in love with the pretty girl. And now he has announced his intention to get a job and work for a year.

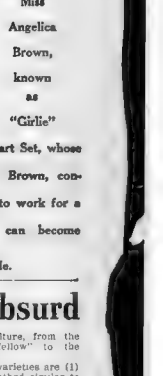
Colonel Astor, true friend of all lovers, kindly offered to give Thornton a position in the splendid offices of the Astor estate. But Mama Brown said: "Nothing doing! I prefer my son-in-law to work."

So Thornton will have to get a job in a regular hall office, where he will have to begin at the bottom and punch the clock just like any other member of the laboring classes.





Above You See Miss Brown with Thornton Wilson, Colonel Astor's Pet Nephew and the Next Candidate for Sentence. Below Is Mr. Maurice Burke-Roche, Who Served His Time as Candidate, Was Forgotten, but Got the Habit and Can't Stop.



Miss Angelica Brown, known as "Girlie" in New York's Smart Set, whose father, Mr. James Brown, condemns her suitors to work for a year before they can become eligible.

Do You Believe in Palmistry? Science Shows It Absurd

By Sir Ray Lankester, K. C. B., F. R. S.

PALMISTRY or chiromancy is one of the oldest of the large family of systems for foretelling the future. It existed in China 4,000 years ago, and is treated in the most ancient Greek writings as a well-known belief. The gypsies probably brought it with them from India. Those who practise palmistry pretend that by the inspection and proper interpretation of the various lines and wrinkles and flexion folds of the skin of the hand the mental or moral disposition and powers of an individual can be discovered, and not only that, but that the current of future events in the life of an individual are indicated by them.

Seeking for "Signs."

To this it is necessary to add nowadays the presence of a reservation by these whose markings of events in the future of their owner. It is not what we might have expected—a positive plan seeking for a definite occult mysteries, should be found in the varying folds of the hand. The origin of this reservation to explicite his reference to attribute magical importance to what he could not explain.

The folds of the skin on the palmar surface of the hand are, as a matter of fact, so disposed that the thick loose skin shall be capable of bending in grasping, while it is held down to the skeleton of the hand by fibrous lines of attachment, so as to prevent its slipping and consequent insecurity of grip. The swellings bounded by the lines of folding and flexure are called "monticuli" by the palmist, and are simply subcutaneous fat, which acts as a padding, or cushioning, and protects from pressure the lines of fibrous attachment to the deeply placed bones. They differ slightly in different individuals, as do other structures.

These same lines and monticuli are present in the hands and feet of the chimpanzee and other manlike apes, and were specially exhibited by me in the upper gallery of the Natural History Museum; but no palmist ever read the ape's hand, although, according to the great and authoritative treatises on palmistry, it would be perfectly easy to do so, since every variation in the lines and the monticules has been mechanically dealt with, and its supposed indications precisely determined by a formal set of rules.

There are similar lines on that part of the foot in human infants and in the adult apes which correspond to the palmar surface. But no palmist has attempted to deal with them. The fact is that the indications indicated by such marks as the line of heart, the line of life, the line of the head, and the like of fortune are purely arbitrary, as are those of the monticules of Jupiter, Saturn, the sun, Mercury, Mars and the moon.

In past times there have been great divergences in their interpretation by different schools, but the present uniformity is as devoid of any conceivable relation to fact as were the former divergences. It is impossible to discuss the asserted correlation of the lines and monticules of the hand with other character or life history, so no facts are taken into account by those that there is such a correlation. We have bare assertion, and nothing more, as in most of the other doctrines of magic.

Nothing But Guesswork.

The shape of the hand and of the fingers and the softness, hardness, dryness, and moisture of the skin are taken into account by most palmists. Few, if any, of those who pretend at the present day to read hand are really acquainted with the elaborate rules laid down by the palmistaking if deluded people who endeavored to construct a system of astrology of the hand by assigning the names of heavenly bodies to parts of it. The modern professional palmist forms a judgment and guess as to his or her client's character and probable past and future history by indications and information obtained from the client's face, manner, conversation, costume, and private information. If a vague prophecy made by the "fortune-teller" should by hazard turn out to be near the truth, it is remembered and quoted by the client as a proof of the truth of palmistry; if it does not prove to be correct, it is forgotten.

The question of the possibility of judging of the character and disposition of a man or woman by the form and proportions of the hand or the foot, is altogether distinct from that of the reality of "divination" of future events by applying a system of rules to the interpretation of the lines and swellings of the palmar surface. Persons of quick perception are in the habit of forming judgments as to character from a first impression of the face, expression, voice, and movements of another individual.

Often such judgments are erroneous and I do not know that they have ever been proved by a large series of experiments to be more frequently right than wrong. But it is possible that correct indications may sometimes be thus obtained. Many people think that they can form more or less correct judgments as to certain mental characteristics by observing the shape and play of the hand and fingers or of the foot. There may be such a correlation of the gesture and form of hands or feet with some mental qualities, but obviously this has nothing to do with palmistry.

Small Hands and "Birth."

It has never been really proved that persons of what is called "good birth" have smaller hands and feet than persons of "low birth," although it is often assumed that they have. And it has never been shown why small hands and feet should go with "good birth," supposing that they do so, or why some people have large and some small external organs. The possession of certain manual occupations in enhancing the beauty of the hand, which is excluded, the question raised is as to naturally or hereditarily small hands and feet.

Palmistry is a development of one of the methods of so-called divination.

Divination is that branch of magic which attempts to discover secrets or to foresee events, while magic in general is an attempt to influence the course of events. Divination is the process of attempting to obtain knowledge of secret or future things by means of oracles, omens, or astrology. One of its methods is "necromancy," the supposed communication with the spirits of the dead. This word is formed from the Greek nekros, a corpse, and manteia, divination; but in Latin it was erroneously written "ulcromantia," and so gave rise to the application of the name of the "black art" to sorcery and witchcraft in general.

By the ancients all omens, as well as oracles, were regarded as sent by the gods, and the orthodox belief has always been either that the soothsayer is directly controlled by a god or a spirit, or, on the other hand, that the material objects inspected and regarded as signs of the future are controlled by the gods or by spirits, so as to afford information. Divination is, and has been, practised in all grades of civilization and culture, from the Australian "black-fellow" to the American medium.

Among its many varieties are (1) crystal gazing, a method similar to that of dreams, excepting that the vision is set up voluntarily by gazing into a crystal ball or a basin of water; (2) shell-hearing; (3) the divining-rod in its various forms; (4) sieve, ring, and bible swinging; (5) automatic writing; (6) sand divination, widely practised in Africa; (7) trance-speaking; (8) the examination of the hand, or palmistry; (9) card-laying; (10) the interpretation of dreams; (11) the casting of lots, or sortilege; (12)) the drawing of texts from the Bible or from Virgil (the sortes Virgilianae of old times); (13) the inspection of the entrails of animals freshly killed, and the study of footprints; (14) augury by omens, such as the behavior and cry of birds and the meeting with ominous animals; and lastly (15 and 16) the two highly elaborated and pretentious systems of astrology (divination by the stars) and geomancy (divination by the lie of hills and rivers).

In the case of astrology the stars are believed not merely to prognosticate the future, but also to influence it, and the latter is the special feature of geomancy, practised in China, where no house or other building can be erected without a certificate as to its favorable position in regard to "magic" by the professional "geomancer"—a peculiar representative of the local government surveyor and sanitary officer of Western Europe.

Rogues and Impostors.

In the exercise of these arts of divination there is no doubt that, owing to the concentration of his attention on the thing to be inspected the operator may, in many kinds of "divination," "self-hypnotized," or brought into that well-known mental condition in which the unconscious memory and other special mental processes are active, while an exaggerated acuteness of the senses is produced.

In other cases the person who consults the "operator" may be so influenced. Hallucination of one kind and another is therefore likely to occur, and thus mystery and apparently marvellous results are not inconsistent with the good faith of the operator. But there is no reason to doubt that the modern sorcerer who make money by their pretended divinations are rogues and impostors of a particularly dangerous and injurious variety.

WHERE THE WOMEN RULE THE MEN

How Female Suffrage Works Out Among the Tuaregs, Where Men Go Veiled, Everything Belongs to the Wife, A Husband Can't Stay Out at Night, and Every Man Has to Do Just as Some Woman Tells Him

WOMAN suffrage is really just [illegible] to some real [illegible] enfranchised America [illegible] Africa however, it is [illegible]

Down in the [illegible] border of the Sahara, not very far from Tripoli [illegible] is a large tribe of native [illegible] women, [illegible] for centuries [illegible] woman who [illegible] and can walk [illegible] smaller [illegible] an [illegible]

Very few white [illegible] known of these Tuaregs, [illegible] recent publication of [illegible] Vischer, took [illegible] "Across the Sahara." Vischer is one [illegible] explorers who have [illegible] the Sahara to [illegible]

"When a man goes out after sun set he is usually followed by a negro servant [illegible] to [illegible] his steps, and [illegible] he forgets himself [illegible] too late. He will [illegible] and must count [illegible] is not put onto the [illegible]

"One [illegible] it would take a [illegible] at an under [illegible] It does To obtain the [illegible] can be has to go to the [illegible] has to look for other means than his usual work of repairing [illegible] or selling goods for the [illegible] hope of [illegible] wealth [illegible] annual [illegible]

Having thus displayed [illegible] physical prowess, he is [illegible] able to take up the [illegible] duties of simple housekeeping [illegible]

der the laws of the Tuaregs, the man must obey the woman in every respect. Descent is traced through the mother.

The women show their proud faces to all the world, but the man goes about veiled. In the presence of a woman of noble birth, indeed, men cover their faces and heads altogether. The woman give the children what little instruction they receive and train them naturally to respect their mothers rather than their fathers.

Physically the men are more powerful than the women but socially and politically they are the "weaker sex."

It is the men who do the cooking and mind the children, while the women adorn themselves in their characteristic raiment. This dress consists of a sort of smock, dyed with indigo and embroidered down the front. Over this they wear a long piece of blue cotton cloth sung round the body in all sorts of [illegible] lons and [illegible] under the arms.

[illegible] heads and their greasy [illegible], falling in many small tresses on both sides of the face and [illegible] with rancid camel butter, they wear, like a mantilla a square piece of woolen cloth dyed a bright red. With their large, silver earrings, heavy bangles and anklets, shrill, but not unpleasant voices, henna-dyed hands, coal black eyes and shining white teeth, their whole appearance expresses a gay defiance of the melancholy desert which surrounds them.

The men are fortunate if they can obtain a loin-cloth and a veil. There is no dolling-up" for them. Their personal appearance doesn't count at all. Indeed, their domestic duties are so arduous that when the day's work is over they have little inclination for anything but sleep.

In addition to their household duties, however, the men are expected to increase the family store by rearing camels or doing odd jobs for Arabian traders.

The chief of the Tuaregs is a woman. She is selected by the women, the men having nothing to say about it at all. The women make the laws and naturally enough they don't exactly favor the men. Thus, a woman can divorce a husband for the slightest cause but the man has no remedy at all for the marital infidelity of his spouse.

The property of the Tuaregs descends to the daughters. Upon the death of a woman her widower receives nothing if there is a surviving daughter, but if there is no daughter the widower divides the property with the male children.

The strange [illegible] at all [illegible] that the men [illegible] yet become uneasy under the yoke. They have not yet made any attempt to secure "equal rights" with their women [illegible] seemingly are quite reconciled with their lot.

This is particularly surprising in view of the fact that in their veins flows the blood of Berber ancestry, and in their language is preserved the purest speech of that tongue, for the ancestors of these tribes were perhaps the most liberty-loving of that independent race. Indeed, their presence in the Great Desert is probably due to the fact that rather than be subjugated, they retreated to the vast arid plain.

It [illegible] too, that the lives of the Tuaregs are spent mostly on the march, often without food and shelter, under conditions where the physical superiority of the males might be supposed to give them corresponding privileges, the dominance of their women is the more surprising.

It has been suggested that the Tuareg customs are really the best survivals we have of what is called "the matriarchate." There was a period when women ruled and owned all the world, and the men were used only as hunters. That time was ages ago, but there are traces of it still in [illegible] governments. The [illegible] Man didn't have to bother about it. He was too taken up [illegible] masculine pleasures, [illegible] and fighting. Knowledge [illegible] and by means of it the women of the matriarchate kept the men in subjection. She was the priestess of the first rude religions. Her knowledge was handed down to her daughters, who kept up the female governmental system.

There came a time, however, when men chafed at their position. There was probably a real war between the women and the men. The latter won, and so for ages women occupied approximately the same position as now.

The suffrage movement is a bit of poetic justice and an effort at partial return to power. The Tuaregs probably have had handed down to them in better shape than any other tribe the traditions and customs of "the matriarchate."

Will the rest of this particular family of mankind [illegible] didn't win out in the great war of the women and men they have no tradition to explain.

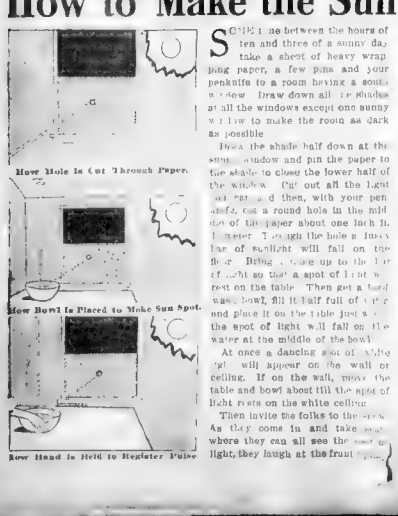
How to Make the Sun Show the Beating of Your Heart



SOMETIME between the hours of ten and three of a sunny day take a sheet of heavy wrapping paper, a few pins and your penknife to a room having a south window. Draw down all the shades at all the windows except one sunny one. How to make the room as dark as possible.

Draw the shade half down at the south window and pin the paper to the shade to close the lower half of the window. Cut out all the light you can and then, with your penknife, cut a round hole in the middle of the paper about one inch in diameter. Through the hole a fine ray of sunlight will fall on the floor. Bring a chair up to the ray of light so that a spot of light will rest on the table. Then get a large [illegible] bowl, fill it half full of water and place it on the table just so the spot of light will fall on the water at the middle of the bowl.

At once a dancing spot of white light will appear on the wall or ceiling. If on the wall, move the table and bowl about till the spot of light rests on the white ceiling.

Then invite the folks to the show. As they come in and take seats where they can all see the spot of light, they laugh at the funny [illegible] [illegible] of the [illegible] star over [illegible] and don't know what will happen. The lecturer asks all to sit perfectly still and keep the spot quietly down, though it trembles shakily with occasional nervous jumps. Then Mr. or Miss Lecturer says that as all the solid earth seems perfectly still, and the house [illegible] perfectly still also. Anybody can see that all the magnified motions of the apparently solid ground by the aid of this Motion Magnifier.

The next minute the spot jumps into a kaleidoscope thing, and the learned lecturer pulls up the shade at one of the windows and looks out. Maybe it is a coal cart passing by, and so the ground and the house.

Next the lecturer asks a boy in the audience to come to the table and roll up the left sleeve to make his wrists quite bare, and then to rest his wrist on the edge of the bowl while sitting at the table. This must be done carefully so the spot where we can feel the beating of the pulse shall press on the edge of the bowl.

Every one in the room sits perfectly still and presently the trembling spot of light begins to wig-wag as the swinging of a pendulum or the beating of your heart. The boy lifts his wrist from the edge of the bowl and the regular beating of the spot stops and, as everybody laughs, it wiggles about as crazy as ever.

Let a girl try the Motion Magnifier, and all can see that her pulse may be different from that of the boy.

The Motion Magnifier can be developed into one of the most amusing and instructive of home-made scientific toys. One can even map out earthquakes shocks with it, and it will respond to the faintest of vibrations—movements the most sensitive persons cannot feel. Keep your paper and pins—soon you will find in this section a description of some other interesting things you can do with your Motion Magnifier.

How New York Protects the Ears of Its School Children

MUCH benefit is expected to follow the recent establishment of quiet zones in the neighborhood of New York school houses. In these zones only the lightest traffic is allowed, hawkers are forbidden to make any undue noise in their efforts to dispose of their wares and street organs are absolutely barred.

This salutary condition of affairs was brought about by the passage of an ordinance by the Board of Aldermen through the persistent efforts of Mrs. Isaac L. Rice, the founder of the Society for the Suppression of Unnecessary Noises.

It was Mrs. Rice who started the movement some years ago to establish quiet zones in the vicinity of hospitals. The value of the suggestion was at once recognized, and a number of municipalities throughout the country at once passed ordinances prohibiting unnecessary noise in hospital streets.

While talking to children in the public schools regarding the value of quiet to the sick and pointing out to them that it was their duty to be as quiet as possible while walking through hospital streets, Mrs. Rice was struck with the fact that the children themselves were victims of the same nuisance.

"I was astonished," she said, "to discover the amount of preventable noise which penetrated the class rooms and the foulness of the air within them, this being due to the fact that in most cases the windows were tightly closed.

"The children seemed dull and apathetic, a fact which, under the circumstances, was not at all surprising, and the teachers complained bitterly of the noise which compelled them to keep the windows closed.

"There can be no doubt of the importance of protecting the young from the injurious effect of outside noise, which, by [illegible] concentration difficult, increases the mental effort required for school tasks, and by preventing free ventilation menaces the physical well-being of the child. This is a matter so grave and so far reaching in its consequences that its utter neglect is little short of incredible."

Mrs. Rice, with her usual vigor, at once set about to remedy these conditions. She had an ordinance framed designating certain quiet zones in the vicinity of the public schools, and succeeded in having the Board of Aldermen pass it.

New York has already recognized the wisdom of the plan proposed by Mrs. Rice and has put it into execution. Twenty-five State Boards of Health and seventy-five city school superintendents have already endorsed the plan, and there is little doubt that New York's example will soon be followed throughout the country.

Tattooed for Her Traitor Lover

The Unusual Stratagem of Lieutenant Schorveder, Who Inscribed the Fortifications of Posen on His Sweetheart's Skin, in Order to Put Them in Russian Hands

"That very night he began picking out the details of the fortifications of Posen upon her fair skin with needles and indigo ink. He showed where the great guns were placed, where the powder magazines and ammunition stores were situated, all the details of moats, fosses, glacis, scarp and counter scarp."

Berlin, Jan. 11

HAS fiction helped to make facts once more?

Every reader of Rider Haggard's books remembers that interesting story, "Mr. Meeson's Will," in which a greatly needed will was tattooed on a girl's back, because the testator, wrecked on a desert island, had no paper on which to write. An actual episode has just occurred in Germany beside which Mr. Meeson's case becomes commonplace.

Lieutenant Johann Schorveder was a bright and attractive young officer in the German army. Unfortunately he lacked money, and the influence to procure him advancement. He had a strong taste for all the good things of life, and very little opportunity of gratifying it.

He was desperately in love with a charming young girl named Ida Mullerthal, but the German army regulations say that a subaltern officer may not marry until he has satisfied his superiors that he has income enough to keep a wife. Schorveder could not do this.

Debts pressed him on every side. Is it any wonder that he should have yielded to temptation?

Just at the critical moment the tempter appeared on the scene in the shape of a secret agent of the Russian army seeking information about German military plans. Schorveder happened to be stationed in Posen, the capital of German Poland, the country which would first be invaded by Russia in case of a war with Germany. The Russian spy knew Schorveder's troubles and financial difficulties, and that is just why he approached him.

"I will give you one hundred thousand marks ($25,000) for the plans of the fortifications of Posen," said the Russian tempter to the poor fellow.

Schorveder hesitated, and that meant that he was lost. He thought over his difficulties and that $25,000 became an irresistible lure.

Then the question was how to get the plans away. He knew that all the officers of the garrison were watched with extraordinary care, because of its strategic position. He was an object of especial watchfulness on account of his known financial embarrassments. It was not likely that he could carry or send such a thing as a plan of the fortifications out of the province without being discovered.

Discovery would mean death or life imprisonment!

In his perplexity he confided in Ida Mullerthal, and she agreed to do anything to help him, like a true woman, having no idea of right or wrong beyond her lord's wishes.

"Make the drawings and I will carry them to Russia myself," she suggested.

"You would probably be found out," said Schorveder. "They know our relations, and we are watched by the government. Discovery would mean a long term of imprisonment for you, or even worse."

"Then I have it!" cried Ida. "You shall tattoo the plans on my skin and I will go to Russia with them. They will never discover them there."

Schorveder agreed to his sweetheart's fantastic scheme. That very night he began picking out the details of the fortifications of Posen upon her fair skin with needles and indigo ink.

He showed how the great guns were placed, where the powder magazines and ammunition stores were situated, all the details of moats, fosses, glacis, scarp and counter scarp.

It required many nights of painful labor to complete the work. Often the pain would become so great that the devoted girl could not stand it.

Her lover would desist for a time and soothe her with kisses and endearments. Then she would beg him to go on with the torture.

For days and weeks they labored, and at last the work was finished.

It was easy for Fraulein Mullerthal to obtain a ticket for Russia. The secret agent had notified the Russian authorities that this woman had a message for them. The Russian general in command at Warsaw received her graciously.

"Where are the plans?" he asked after he had led her into a remote and secluded chamber of the fortress.

"They are on me," stammered the blushing girl.

"Produce them," said the general, impatiently.

She pulled down the neck of her shirtwaist a little. "Here they are," she murmured.

Then the puzzled general realized the truth. He saw the outlines of the outer part of the fortifications tattooed near the girl's neck. He investigated further and found the complete plan of the fortifications of Posen brought up to the present moment.

The general gazed at the work with all the satisfaction that a military expert could feel in such a prospect. Here was the most valuable information that a man in his position could possibly secure. It would be his special duty in case of war to make the first attack on Posen. Its defenses were now completely revealed to him. We know that military commanders always obtain more or less information about the enemy's defenses, but rarely is the complete plan of a critical position laid before them.

The General saw where he could lead his force into Posen without coming under fire of the big guns for every fortification must have some weak spot. He noted the projecting angles of the fosses which could be most easily captured by assault.

He saw where he could mine under the enemy's defences, and where he might even blow up the magazines. No detail was hidden from his expert eye.

Doubtless the general's professional satisfaction was not unmixed with a little personal pleasure. He looked long and closely at the plans. He noted with joy the position of every angle, curve and sally of the fortifications.

He made an extremely careful copy of the plan of the fortifications and finally he paid Ida the $25,000 promised, with many expressions of satisfaction.

The girl returned as promptly as possible to her lover in Posen. They planned to go away to America and live happily ever afterward on the money gained, which appeared to them a fortune.

But Schorveder had already fallen under the suspicion of the authorities. His conversations with the Russian agent had been observed. His superiors searched his dwelling for plans and incriminating documents, but could find nothing. He was continually shadowed.

The unaccountable signs of prosperity that followed the return of Ida Mullerthal caused suspicion to grow much stronger. Acting suddenly and secretly, as usual in all cases affecting the military security of the country, the authorities arrested Schorveder and Ida Mullerthal and put each of them in a cell remote from any other prisoners.

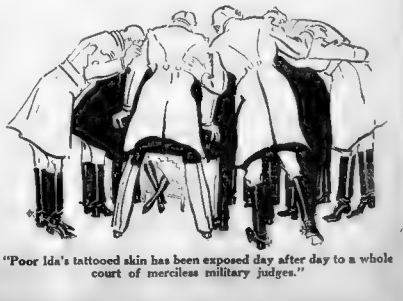
Naturally, each prisoner was searched as a preliminary measure. As soon as this ceremony was performed on Ida Mullerthal, the authorities understood the whole mystery. Here was the explanation of the trip to Russia and the unaccountable prosperity of the young couple.

The trial of the pair is now going on before a military court behind closed doors with the utmost secrecy. No details are given out, as these might be of service to the enemy. The Poles are [illegible] to the German Government, and many of them are serving as soldiers. The trial might suggest to many of them a new way of conveying military secrets to German officials.

Poor Ida Mullerthal's tattooed skin has been exposed over and over again, day after day, to a whole court of merciless military judges. It is impossible not to feel sympathy for her sin. Her conduct was prompted almost entirely by devotion to her lover. Inasmuch as she carries the defenses of Posen indelibly stamped upon her, it is quite unthinkable to let her go free as long as those fortifications remain what they are. She must be imprisoned in some secret place beyond the reach of all but the highest military officers.

For Schorveder there will be less sympathy. His punishment may be death, and is not likely to be less than imprisonment for life.

Miss Ida Mullerthal, Who Allowed Her Lover to Tattoo the Plans of Posen on Her Skin.



"Poor Ida's tattooed skin has been exposed day after day to a whole court of merciless military judges."

Extremes of Fashion

The Begum of Bhopal Furnishes One ...Lovely Mrs. Phil Lydig the Other

THE Begum of Bhopal and Mrs. Phil Lydig represent two extremes of fashion—fashion in India and fashion in New York.

"East is East and West is West, and never the twain shall meet," says Rudyard Kipling, and his observation is strongly borne out by the pictures of these two eminent personages.

The Begum of Bhopal is an important female ruler in India. She was the only woman ruler among the throng of Indian princes who did homage to King George at the late Durbar at Delhi. Religion and etiquette require that the Begum should never expose the tiniest bit of her skin in public.

So she appeared swathed in silks, so that her form was hardly distinguishable, her face heavily veiled, and even her hands hidden.

"The more a lady shows of her self, the more of a lady she is," observed a philosopher in New York society recently.

Mrs. Phil Lydig is perhaps the most interesting illustration of this epigram in New York. Mrs. Lydig is very handsome and brilliant and is particularly remarkable for the generous display she makes of her beautiful back at social affairs in the evening. Even in other respects it cannot be said that she is niggardly.

"Excuse my back, won't you?" said Mrs. Lydig to a man on whom she was turning her back in a box at the opera.

"Don't mention it," said the man. "The pleasure is mine."

Mrs. Lydig was Miss Rita de Acosta, a member of a Cuban family noted for beauty. She was first married to W. E. D. Stokes, the celebrated "old rove." Her present husband, Captain Philip M. Lydig, is a member of a very old and distinguished Knickerbocker family.

The Begum of Bhopal completely veiled from head to foot and Mrs. Phil Lydig in the decollete costume so much admired in New York and other civilized Occidental cities.

We BEGIN to Tap Nature's REAL Resources

Farming 10,000 Miles of Sea Bottom for Food for the Whole United States

By Rene Bache.

THE biggest farm in the world is about to be taken up under the direct agricultural management of our Government. It extends over at least 10,000 square miles and will yield annual crops that will contribute not only to the enrichment of the entire population of the United States, but actually feed them as well.

Most remarkable of all the features of this farm is the fact that it is not located on land at all but out in the ocean. It is a vast marine "truck garden," in which the vegetables actually plant themselves. And these vegetables—as useful for table purposes as tomatoes or string beans—are of huge size, being, in fact, the largest plants in the world, if exception be made of some giant trees.

These plants, which are called "kelps," are of a number of species. How good they are to eat is indicated by the circumstance that the Japanese consume 100,000,000 pounds of them annually, converting the marine vegetables into at least sixty different marketable products, every one of them deemed a delicacy. But—and this is a matter of utmost importance—they are likely to prove most valuable of all as a source of potash salts—derived from the sea water—in which they are extraordinarily rich.

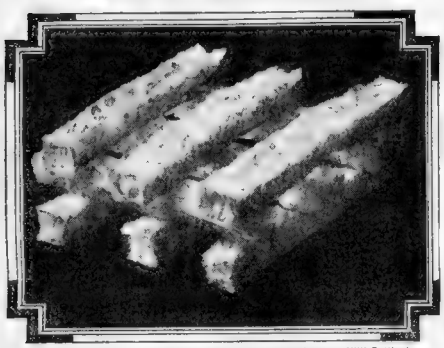
The Fisheries Bureau steamer Albatross, during the last Summer made, at the request of the Department of Agriculture, a thorough exploration of the kelp fields, which extend all the way from California to the western end of the Aleutian Chain. There are vast beds of the plants off the Straits of Fuca and the southeast coast of Alaska. Samples of many species were obtained, and were sent to the Bureau of Soils for analysis, with a view to ascertaining the percentages of potash, iodine and other useful substances contained in them.

The stems of one species are sometimes 300 feet in length, each one bearing at the top a huge air-bulb, from which a tuft or frond of streamer-like leaves 30 to 40 feet long extends. Yet the stalk itself is no thicker than a window cord, very strong and flexible. The bulbs, by the way, often holding several gallons, are used by the Eskimos as receptacles for whale oil.

The kelps are not mere floating growth, like the seaweeds of the Sargasso Sea in the North Atlantic, but are attached by their stems to the rocks of the bottom. Doubtless, when we undertake the business of harvesting them, we shall collect them as the Japanese do, by means of drags and grapples tearing them loose. But immense quantities of them can be gathered off the coast of southeast Alaska and elsewhere in the shallows by wading or in small boats.

These remarkable vegetables do not bear flowers, but like other kinds of seaweeds, reproduce themselves by means of "spores," which correspond to seeds. Gigantic as they are, they are merely annuals, like lettuce and beets, developing anew each year. All of the plants grown in the vast marine gardens here described die each Winter and are replaced by others which start from spores in the Spring. Thus it may be said literally that they plant themselves. And so the fields are capable of furnishing inexhaustible crops annually, without putting anybody to the trouble of replanting. They sow themselves, and all the farmer has to do is to come along and reap the harvest.

Up to the present time, however, all of this vast yearly crop has been allowed to go to waste. Representing a value of nobody knows how many millions of dollars annually as food and for other purposes, it is permitted to pass out of existence ungarnered, perishing and by decay, returning its material to the waters. The case is exactly as if an immense area of land in the United States were spontaneously producing an annual crop of peas, beans and other garden truck, to no purpose, all of it being permitted to rot, rather than take the trouble to harvest it.



Above, the Kelp (Alaria Crassifolia) Which the United States Will Cultivate. Below, a White, Flaky Product from It, Much Used in Japan for Food.

THE fear that we are exhausting nature's resources belongs to the weakling, the ignorant, the unthinking.

We are just beginning to learn how to use nature's resources, and they are inexhaustible. Fifty years from now this generation and the countless generations before us will seem like little children standing puzzled before a big machine built to give them everything they want—wondering what it is for!

The untiring energy of the sun will be ours. Here is a man who has made a machine which takes the solar heat and makes it run engines. It is a forerunner of improved sun machines, which will make the deserts fertile and give us power forever.

Although only the leaves are good for food, these, as already stated, are of great size. The Japanese first dry them on the beaches in the sun, the stems being cut off, and then subject them to a manipulation which results in obtaining from them an astonishing variety of products wholly different from each other. Thus they start in by scraping off the green outside coat of the fronds, which makes one kind of table delicacy, much esteemed. Then, by further scraping, shredding and slicing of the substance on the leaf they produce dozens of other articles which are adapted for various food purposes, eventually appearing in the markets in the form of sheets, crisp sticks, sugared sweetmeats and in powdered shape—as a sort of "curry" for rice, and even as a "tea."

Europeans living in Japan find these kelp vegetables delicious. They are also exceedingly nutritious. All of them are known under the general name of "kombu," and sales of them in Japan and in China, whither they are exported, are enormous and steadily increasing. They enter into the dietary of every Japanese family, having been utilized as food ever since 1730, and in the city of Osaka alone forty-five factories are engaged in the manufacture of various forms of "kombu."

The species of kelps thus used by the Japanese are the same as those found on our own shores. But they have no such vast fields of these wonderful vegetables as occur along our northwest coast. Inasmuch as this is an extremely cheap source of food, there is every reason why we should try to make the most of it, with a view to keeping down the steadily-rising cost of living. There would be no great difficulty in gathering the plants in unlimited quantities, curing them by sun-drying, and either converting them into the food products in factories conveniently located near the sources of supply or else shipping them in the crude state to all parts of the country.

This, indeed, is sure to be done sooner or later. One of the objects sought during the recent explorations of the kelp fields by the Fisheries Bureau steamer Albatross was to pick out the species most desirable as food. Naturally, where there are so many species some are sure to be better than others. The Japanese long ago found this to be the case, and accordingly they manufacture different kinds of "kombu" from different kinds of kelps.

In the opinion of our own agricultural experts it will be more than worth while to cultivate some of the best varieties of these plants, introducing them into shallow waters over large areas along the coast—possibly on the Atlantic as well as the Pacific side—in such situations as would render easy the harvesting of the annual crop.

By such means an enormous addition would in effect be made to the cultivable area of the United States, employment being given to many thousands of people in a marine farming industry as yet unknown, while vast quantities of delicious vegetables of kinds with which we are not yet acquainted would find their way into our markets at prices so low as to bring them within easy reach of the poorest people.

One of the many methods of treatment adopted by the Japanese consists in dipping the entire frond in strong vinegar until it is thoroughly saturated, and then drying it in the open air. This not only has a preserving effect, but imparts flavor. An American gentleman residing in Japan not long ago suggested to the owner of a "kombu" factory that he might prepare a very satisfactory breakfast food from the material, and this was done, the result being a flaky product most palatable and delicious.

From the huge fronds is obtained a remarkable substance, which, chemists say, is thirty-seven times as gummy as gum arabic. Evaporated on slate slabs, it takes the form of thin sheets, resembling gelatin, and very flexible. So transparent are these sheets that in Japan they are used by poor people for windows.

Harnessing the Waves, the Moon-Drawn Tides and Rivers to Run All Our

TWICE every day all the millions of tons of shipping in New York harbor are lifted to a height of over four feet and dropped the same distance by the tide. Over three-quarters of the surface of the globe nearly the same phenomenon takes place in the course of every twenty-four hours.

All that is the work of the tides, which, in turn, are principally due to the pull of the moon upon our earth. If this force could be turned to practical account it would do all the mechanical work now required by man upon earth several times over.

The great problem is to turn this power to account upon a large scale. It has already been put to use on a small scale. In many places along the New England coast small saw mills and other mills are run successfully by the power of the tide. In these cases a wheel is usually placed in the water at the entrance of a creek or small river. As the tide flows in it revolves the wheel, and produces power that works the mill. On the ebb tide the same result is obtained by an ingenious mechanical arrangement of the wheel.

The problem is therefore solved practically. The task of applying it on a vast scale is now engaging the attention of engineers.

The engineers will first make use of the tidal currents which accompany the force of the rising and the falling of the tides. Such currents are well known, and in some of our great rivers they are of the utmost consequence. These currents of water can, like water streams of any other kind, be made to do useful work. We can, for instance, impound the rising water in a reservoir, and as the tide falls we can compel the inclosed water to work a water wheel before it returns to the sea.

The area of the reservoir can be computed, which would retain sufficient water to work a water wheel of given horse power. It can be shown that the area of the reservoir necessary to impound water enough to produce one hundred horsepower would be forty acres. The whole question is then reduced to a simple one of expense. The steam engine worked by coal may be at present more economical, but when the coal supply is a little further exhausted this will no longer be true.

Associated with the force of the tides is the motion of the waves, which is also going on all day long over two-thirds of the surface of the globe. The motion of the waves alone would be sufficient to do all the work required by man several times over. The difficulty of harnessing the waves lies in the fact that their power is excessive and liable to wreck any machine connected with them. This difficulty, however, has been overcome, since it has been possible to construct ships which are entirely beyond the power of any waves to wreck.

Within a short time four practical methods of harnessing the waves have been patented. In one case the device consists of a large square float to which four auxiliary floats are hinged. The rocking motion between the auxiliaries and the main float is utilized to operate a series of pistons pumping air into a compressed air tank. The compressed air tank and four pairs of cylinders are mounted on the main float. The piston rods are connected at their outer ends to the four floats and when these floats are rocked by the waves they serve to reciprocate the pistons and pump the air. This action takes place regardless of the direction in which the waves are travelling, because the auxiliary floats extend in four directions.

The second of these machines depends for its operation on a very ingenious application of the action of the waves. It is well known that the wave disturbance of the ocean does not extend to any great depth. It is the relative motion of the surface water with respect to the water at a considerable depth that is made use of in this case to generate power.

A float is provided from the centre of which projects down into the sea a shaft fitted at its lower end with a set of radial fins. When the float is rocked by the waves the shaft tends to remain vertical, owing to these fins. Mounted on the float are a series of cylinders provided with the usual pistons, which are connected to an extension of the vertical shaft just referred to. And while the pistons remain virtually fixed the cylinders are reciprocated upon them by the rocking of the float. The pistons serve to circulate oil through a rotary engine, which in turn drives the dynamo, and thus generates electricity. When the wave motion becomes too violent an electrically operated bypass permits a portion of the oil to circulate without passing through the motor, and thus an excessive speed is prevented.

The third machine consists of a large crib placed in the water and having one end open so that the waves will wash up over the floor of the crib, as they do on an ocean beach. At the back of the crib are a pair of curved deflecting walls, before which is placed a triangular casing provided with a series of swinging doors or vanes.

When the waves wash up over the floor of the crib they close the vanes against the casing, and divided by the prow of the casing, are directed against the deflecting walls. The rear of the triangular casing is open, permitting the water to flow through as the waves recede and strike against the rear faces of the vanes, causing them to open. The vanes are geared to a series of piston rods, which operate the cylinders to fill a compressed air chamber. This chamber, by means of a pair of air motors, operates a dynamo and generates electricity, which may be conveyed to any desired spot, and utilized.

In the fourth machine two floats are hinged to each other, and one carries a rack adapted to engage a pinion mounted on the other float. As the floats rock to and fro the pinion is rotated first in one direction, and then the other, and this motion serves to pump air into a tank. The air from the tank operates a pneumatic motor, which in turn, drives a dynamo, and generates electricity. In order to permit the floats to swing about in any direction without danger of fouling the anchor lines, one of the floats is mounted on a swivel, which is securely anchored. By means of contact wheels engaging contact rings on the swivel, the electricity generated is conveyed to a pair of cables, which extend to the shore.

We must not delay too long harnessing the tides, because some day they will cease, for the moon will present constantly the same face to the earth is at present going too fast, and consequently the tidal control at the present moment endeavors to retard the rotation of the earth. The rotation of the moon long since succumbed to tidal control, but that was because the moon was comparatively small, and the tidal power of the earth was enormous. But the earth is large, and more massive than the moon; the tides raised by the moon are but small and weak, and the earth has not yet completely succumbed to the tidal action. But the tides are constant. They

Swamps for Dynamos; Volcanoes for P

ONE of the greatest of our yet unused resources is represented by vast areas of swamp and overflowed lands, which, considered worthless yesterday, are now about to be reclaimed and rendered capable of bearing profitable crops.

These areas, according to the Government's estimate, total about 120,000 square miles. Reclaimed by drainage, at an average cost of $12 an acre, they would support a population of 96,000,000. One gets a notion of the extent of such lands in this country when it is said that if all of them were put together in a single patch they would very nearly cover the three States of Illinois, Indiana and Ohio. Florida is the wettest State, with 30,930 square miles of swamp, and Louisiana comes next with about half as great a swamp and overflowed area.

Already the business of draining our swamp lands has been taken up by the Government, and considerable areas have been reclaimed. The work eventually, doubtless, will be conducted under Federal auspices, on a scale much greater than the irrigation of desert valleys in the West, for which nearly $76,000,000 has been expended up to date. For encouragement in the enterprise we have only to look abroad, where, in Holland and England, have been developed out of swamps and overflowed territory the finest agricultural lands in Europe.

But many of our swamps contain vast deposits of peat, which itself is one of our very important unutilized resources. We have enormous areas of peat bogs, which are seemingly inexhaustible, because, through continued growth of the vegetation which forms them, they renew themselves. The late Professor N. S. Shaler, a very eminent scientist, predicted that the time would arrive

Using the Sun's Heat to Drive Gigantic Engines and Provide Power for All the World

And This Is a Photograph of the Sun Power Plant in Action Pumping 3,000 Gallons of Water a Minute to a Height of 33 Feet with Energy Derived from Solar Heat.

ALL the heat in our universe comes from the sun. If we could but find a satisfactory way of tapping that source directly, the task of heating and doing the work of our world would be easily accomplished.

Contrary to the general belief, the problem of taking power directly from the sun has been practically solved several times. Years ago John Ericsson devised an engine that would run by sun power. The defect of these devices hitherto has been that they are not applicable on a sufficiently large scale. The defect is now being overcome. Frank Shuman, a Philadelphia mechanical engineer, has invented a sun-absorber which has been extensively ordered for use in Egypt and other sunny parts of the world.

Science has told us that the coal fields of the world will be exhausted in a few centuries, and we must look for a new source of heat and power or perish. If all the coal fields on the earth were ignited and consumed in a fire, they would not supply the heat emitted by the sun for the tenth part of a second.

At the distance of 93,000,000 miles, were it not for the atmosphere, the sun's rays would melt a crust of ice 100 feet in depth, enveloping the whole earth, in one year, and would cause all the oceans to boil in a like period.

The sun's heat at its surface could boil in an hour seven hundred thousand million cubic miles of water at freezing point. But 99 per cent of all this heat is wasted.

The earth receives only one-two-thousand-millionth part of the heat radiated by the sun. The latter gives out heat continuously at a rate equivalent to 10,000 horse-power on every square foot of its surface. A procession of icebergs sent against the sun would be melted at the rate of 300,000,000 cubic miles of solid ice per second.

The rays of heat from the sun on the way to the earth pass through a practical vacuum which has a temperature of 300 to 400 degrees below zero. The rays have no ascertainable effect on this vacuum and do not create heat until they meet an object like the earth, capable of being warmed by them.

The temperature of the sun's surface is 18,000 degrees Fahrenheit. The sun radiates 1,117,000 calories per square yard per minute, a calorie being roughly the amount of heat required to raise two pounds of water one degree

How to tap a small part of this almost unthinkable supply of heat is the question.

An Idea Caught from a Greenhouse.

A few years ago Frank Shuman, a Philadelphia mechanical engineer, who had worked hard all his life over his problems, gazed out of the window of his shop. His eyes beheld the old sun striking with slanting rays on the stretches of glass that roofed in the nearby greenhouse of a florist.

Like a flash the glint of the sun on the glass roof gave him the idea. He realized that the heat of the sun, caught up by the panes of glass and thrown into the beds of flowers beneath, was intensified. What if plates of greater size and thickness could be so arranged that they would double and treble the heat of that sun! What tremendous power could be developed!

He worked on the problem for several years, when his ordinary business gave him the time, and he finally developed a sun-power plant that has proved to the scientific world its utility and feasibility. Capitalists and scientists now believe that it will supply power to the sun-baked desert countries to such an extent that eventually the deserts will be wiped off the map.

This is a broad assertion, but Frank Shuman, the Philadelphia engineer, and the English and American millionaires who formed a syndicate to test the powers of his plant, believe it will be realized. One complete sun-power plant is already on its way to Egypt, where it will be at once set up and the work of reclaiming the desert begun. Other plants are in course of erection, to be placed in operation in Arizona, New Mexico, New Zealand and Australia

The machine is an arrangement of heavy glass plates placed at certain angles to catch the rays of the sun and convert their heat into power.

In Egypt and the southwest of this country the sun shines long and fiercely, while fuel and water are extremely scarce. The absence of those two latter necessities has always hampered every attempt at irrigation on a large scale, and in many regions made it impossible The Roosevelt dam required the expenditure of many millions of dollars and years of labor, but in other cases the water is not as accessible as here.

The sun-power plant devised by Shuman, however, will, it is said, with the expenditure of a comparatively small amount of money and but a few years of time do the same work anywhere and more perfectly. That the idea is feasible must have been fairly demonstrated, because capitalists have invested large sums of money in it.

Machine to Irrigate Our Deserts.

This plant acts upon the principle of absorbing the rays of the sun and converting them into power. The heat absorber consists of parallel lines of mirror plates. Each long line is three-sided, like the half of a hexagon, the open or mirrored side being faced outward toward the sun. The sun, beating down upon these glass surfaces, focuses a great heat power, that converts the water flowing through the pipes, arranged about the absorber, and develops in the engine room tremendous power. Just what great force this exerts is shown by the fact that a plant the size of the one illustrated, the one that was shipped to Egypt, develops the power to lift 3,000 gallons of water per minute to the height of 33 feet

By merely doubling and trebling the size of the sun absorber, in addition to taking advantage of the excessive heat in warm climates, the power may be increased many fold Besides the rays absorber the plant consists of a low pressure steam engine, a condenser and auxiliaries. A great advantage of the idea is that the plant is comparatively small, easy of transportation, and also easy to increase in power, according to the needs of the country.

One form of the sun's energy which is now available to us, but is not fully used, lies in the rivers. Every flowing stream is produced by the sun itself, which, uplifting the waters of the oceans in the form of vapors, deposits them as rain upon the land

At the present time (according to an official estimate) there is going to waste, over dams already built by the Government to help navigation, at least 1,600,000 horse-power. This enormous amount of energy, readily available for manufacturing or other useful purposes, is absolutely thrown away; yet, if sold at a fair rental —say, $25 annually per horse-power—it would maintain all of our inland waterways, keeping them dredged and in repair, and, in addition, would construct all of the new canals and other aqueous thoroughfares that we may require in the future.

According to the reckoning of the United States Government Water Resources Bureau, there is now going to waste in the Mississippi Basin alone, year in and year out, 3,300,000 horse-power.

Preparing 1 Bay to Yield 4 Bushels of Oysters a Year for Every 1 of Our 93,000,000 Population

THE United States Government is about to take advantage of nature's resources in the Chesapeake Bay—that great estuary which cuts Maryland almost in half. Through our failure to make proper and intelligent use of its muddy bottom, the bay represents today one of our greatest agricultural wastes Its vast area is comparable in fertility to the valleys of the Nile and the Ganges; but it is adapted by nature for only one crop—the oyster.

It is reckoned by the Government Fisheries Bureau, that, under proper management, the Chesapeake is capable of producing 360,000,000 bushels of oysters a year—that is, to say, about fifty times its present output

Stop a moment and think of what this means. The last census gave the population of the United States, including Hawaii, Porto Rico and Alaska, as 93,402,051 men, women and children

The entire population of Alaska, Hawaii and Porto Rico is approximately 1,350,000. The output of 360,000,000 bushels of oysters from Chesapeake Bay would give every man, woman and child in our country and its outlying territories nearly four bushels of oysters to eat each year! If one bay can be made to do this under intelligent management, why should there ever be any fear of an oyster famine, or why should oysters ever be beyond the reach of anyone who likes them? There are hundreds of other places in the world where oysters can be found

As it stands now, the fisheries of the Chesapeake afford precarious employment for a few months in each year to about five thousand oystermen. Under the new intelligent management, it will give steady and profitable work to five hundred thousand. It pays the oystermen $2,000,000 a year for gathering the wild crop of bivalves; it ought to pay them, under cultivation, not less than 60,000,000.

Only a small part of the area of the Chesapeake that is suitable for oyster farming is now occupied by natural beds. The area available for such culture is at least one thousand square miles, or 640,000 acres, which could easily be made to yield one hundred dollars per acre per annum!

The bottom of the Chesapeake is covered with a fine black sediment, known as "oyster mud," which is so rich that it putrefies in a few hours if exposed to the sun. Were the whole of this great estuary permanently emptied of water, its area would afford the richest farming land in the world, and would doubtless be utilized for the production of immense quantities of garden truck. As the matter stands, however, it is capable of being made not less profitable through oyster culture.

The only serious obstacle in the way is lack of protection for planted oysters. No law in the State of Maryland gives any rights to the owner of a bed which he has created. In one instance a farmer raised 300,000 bushels of fine oysters on seventy acres of bottom, and all of them were taken by tongmen and dredgers. He had no redress whatever.

The stupidity of such an arrangement is obvious, and already it is bringing about very serious consequences. The oyster crop of the Chesapeake is not only failing to increase, but is diminishing so seriously as to excite much alarm. The oysters over wide areas have been entirely wiped out, and those which come to market are much smaller than they used to be, for the simple reason that they are not allowed time to grow big.

The certain prospect is that, unless proper laws are made and rigidly enforced, the oyster-producing industry of the Chesapeake, which has been for more than a century the greatest and most profitable of our fisheries, will before very long cease to exist.

But Maryland and the Fisheries Department of the United States Government are already wide awake to the danger. Legislation is now in course of preparation for a commission composed of Maryland officials and Government officials who are to have supervision over Chesapeake Bay oyster fisheries. Young oysters will be planted in the exhausted beds and a complete system of supervision reclamation and conservation will be put under way.

Rights for fishing will be leased out by the Government and by Maryland to those parts of the Bay which are not under private ownership. Those parts privately owned will be subject to the same supervision. In other words, Chesapeake Bay will be farmed for its oysters in as intelligent and effective fashion as any agricultural land under Government control

An incidental waste worth mentioning, because of no small importance in itself, is the throwing away of hundreds of thousands of gallons of oyster juice every year. Put up in cans like clam juice, it would afford a nourishing and delicious food, desirable for table use, and particularly suitable for invalids

In the meantime any housewife can put up concentrated oyster juice on her own account, if she chooses—straining it through cheesecloth, boiling it down to the requisite density, and pouring it into hot crockery jars that have been previously sterilized by boiling them.

As yet oysters in this country are only a wild crop —though subjected to a species of semi-cultivation in Long Island Sound and a few other places. In the not distant future, however, areas of estuary and tidal river bottoms, wherever such are found, will be under as systematic a culture as any arable land, for the production of this much valued and relatively cheap article of food.

The great crater will, of course, remain as an outlet to any unusual outbreak of the volcano It is believed that the small tunnels may have considerable effect in diminishing the violence of eruptions

Speaking of coal is a reminder of the fact that the late Professor Edward Atkinson said that the threatened exhaustion of the supplies of that important mineral need not alarm us at all, inasmuch as, when it was all gone, a satisfactory substitute for it could be obtained by growing alfalfa or other forage plants on a large scale, drying them and compressing them by water power into solid blocks for burning in stoves and furnaces

And this again calls to mind the fact that a certain town in Canada is now getting all of its illuminating gas from sawdust. It is a town in which the production of lumber is the principal industry, and mountains of sawdust accumulating about the mills had become a serious nuisance No way to get rid of the stuff was thought of, until the idea was suggested to distill it for gas By distillation the finest quality of illuminating gas is obtained from it in quantities sufficient to supply all the needs of the community for cooking and lighting

What's Coming with Spring

A Foretaste of Spring in Charming Combinations of Delicate Tints--and Dewdrop Diamonds and Chiffon for Evening Wear

By Lady Duff-Gordon
("Lucile")

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

Lady Duff-Gordon's new Paris establishment brings her into close touch with that centre of fashion.

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishment is at No. 17 West Thirty-sixth street, New York City.

HERE is an afternoon gown for the coming Spring. One of the most artistic and effective of my late creations. It is of black and white painted chiffon, with an underskirt of white chiffon painted with flower designs in black. The whole gown has an overskirt of black, and is worn with a large black velvet hat, with upstanding blue plumes.

The bodice is softly draped, with black over white, like the treatment of the skirt. It is finished with a belt of blue and green, the belt being ornamented with large ornamental buckles of white satin. The neck is finished with a soft, turn-over collar of old lace and a little ribbon tie of pink satin.

Another charming feature of the skirt is its hem—a deep border of lace, finished with a band of white satin. This scheme of black and white, with the soft drapings rich in contrast and relieved by its lace and variously tinted satin ornaments, worn with the large, black hat, appeals to me as a charming and striking keynote for Spring styles.

For evening I have designed and completed a gown which more than realizes my anticipation. Chiffon and diamonds describes the first effect it produces on the observer. The skirt is of pink chiffon worked with diamonds in Empire design at the foot, over a petticoat trimmed with lace and pink rosettes.

The whole skirt is studded with dewdrop diamonds. The tunic and bodice are of dull vieux blue chiffon, with a sash of Empire green chiffon. The bodice has also an Empire wreath of diamonds to form the [illegible] and the skirt is [illegible] with [illegible] to match.

It seems quite [illegible] Spring [illegible] marked by the [illegible] of [illegible] fashion [illegible] foreshadows the same tendency for general use with the approach of warm weather. The last [illegible] women now [illegible] as well as [illegible] for [illegible] shades of grey and tan [illegible] escape being white.

Let me describe to you my Mid-Winter trousseau of gowns—six tailor made costumes made for Lily Elsie in the one absolutely simple style which is already known to my readers as the "Curate." It is a model for which I have such a great personal affection that ever since I introduced it, five seasons ago, I have always had two or three in readiness for use, sensitive, and therefore practically constant, wear, while it is an equal favorite with my daughter, the countess Cromer, and several of our relatives—in fact, we call it "The Family Livery."

And Lily Elsie, too, has always loved it and worn it, and now has it in white at the season's [illegible] rabat and various softly colored tweeds and [illegible] the collarless coats being so slightly cut out at neck as to make it possible—and pretty—to bring into outward view the blouse collar of embroidered lawn and lace, while little rabat ends of the same snowy and filmy fabrics can also be allowed to hang over the point of the closely-buttoned coat, which save for the stitchings, and these same buttons, covered in its own material, is entirely untrimmed.

The skirt is equally plain. It is carried rather above the waist line in corselet form, and there finished off with a very narrow and closely stitched banding, while there the straightly hanging fabric beneath is so arranged as to give the effect of a plain panel back and front with inverted pleats cunningly introduced at either side to allow of more freedom when the wearer walks, and especially when she sits, though eventually they are held in at the hem by a braid stitched and [illegible] toned tape.

A Spring Evening Gown of White Messaline with the New Extreme Train.

Evening Gown of Chiffon and Diamonds. Skirt of Pink Chiffon worked with Diamonds in Empire Design at Foot Over a Petticoat Trimmed with Lace and Pink Rosettes. Whole Skirt Studded with Dewdrop Diamonds. Tunic and Bodice of Dull Vieux Blue Chiffon with Sash of Empire Green Chiffon. "Lucile" Model.

Really, I call this an excellent start and foundation for a trousseau outfit, and I hear that already other bride-elect are arranging to follow Lily Elsie's good example, and have any specially favored and becoming dress faithfully duplicated, or even triplicated, in different colors and possibly fabrics.

Another trousseau dress for afternoon wear. This is in pale blue charmeuse, with chiffon of the same soft shade veiling flesh pink [illegible] and showing between the lower part of the skirt and the apron tunic, while an effective as well as a seasonable touch is a narrow edging of skunk fur. The same design is copied in blush rose pink and again in the black.

First of all, however, where it moulds the shoulders and the rounded bust, the dress is of flesh pink more and a-veiling white net all closely broidered with jet and paste, and caught together in front with a big and beautiful diamond ornament. And then smothered quite closely about the slender, supple figure, is black chiffon velvet, so cut that its place of fastening must always remain a mystery to the uninitiated, while furthermore it develops in an equally mysterious way into a wisp of a one-sided train. In front it is caught up slightly to show stockings and shoes of pale fresh pink, and a train lining of vivid violet satin, the whole scheme and style you see, of the simplest, and the effect being entirely secured by contour and coloring.

"Lucile" Afternoon Gown for Spring. Underskirt of White Chiffon Painted with Flower Design in Black. The Hem of the Skirt Is a Deep Border of Lace Finished with a Band of White Satin. Whole Dress Has an Overskirt of Black. Worn with a Large, Black Velvet Hat.

Yes, gowns there are, too, galore, and sundry dressing and breakfast gowns in zanna and satin, with an applique design of flowers wrought in shaded satin on their bordering and gunged in sections of lace, while little buds and blossoms of still more closely folded ribbon hang from scarf ends of lace or ribbon at the neck. Dressing jackets to match are also provided, each one having its companion supply of silken stockings and quilted "mule" slippers, while there are sets of underwear and night-dresses to match, all a dainty delight in their softness of faintly pink ninon and cobwebby lace, with narrow threadings and broad empire bandings of satin ribbon of pale pink or blue mauve.

With nearly three months of cold and capricious weather still before us, let me say something about furs.

Who could possibly be content nowadays, for example, with just one fur tie and muff set and a single coat of fur?

Yet once upon a time (yes, it positively seems as long ago as that!) these would have been considered an all sufficient outfit of fur. But then, there was never before such wonderful variety of stole and collar such distinguishing novelties as, say, a long stole whose central part is formed of a straight piece of fur so arranged and gathered as to give the effect of a rather narrow scarf in itself, black cloth one being finished off at the end with brush and paws, while the muff repeats this arrangement, but also utilizes the fox heads as an extra adornment. Another nice scheme of contrasts comprises two magnificent fox skins, the one at the left side being white and the other black, the white head being laid over the black one at the back, while the black brush and tail show up with striking, not to say startling, effect by having the snowy white fur as a background. The muff, of course, repeating this arrangement. This particular fur contrast is certainly effective, but only, I need hardly point out, when the white furs are really and spotlessly white. So any woman who indulges in such a set must needs acquire a second fur alternate wear while the white fox is in temporary—but frequent—seclusion at the cleaners.

Graduated scarfs of ermine, whose broadening ends are bordered with skunk, are another elegant and extravagance — of the moment. While I have also just made the acquaintance of a stole of ermine which is at first deprived of the decorative presence of the little tails, though to make up for their absences there is introduced mid way on the snowy expanse of fur a fringe of milk-white and shining crystal beads.

The tails are collected together as a bordering for the ermine where it gives place to the dark softness of musquash, which makes effective background for another row of the shiny beads, those which finally edge the scarf—and the seal musquash—being of jet, while the muff, on the other hand, is carried out entirely in ermine, with just an edging of the shimmering white beads. Some people will undoubtedly consider all this vastly smart and effective, but I, as you know, have a special affect on ten fingers as a [illegible] even in the case of gowns, and certain and especially when of the head variety. I can find [illegible] or even excuse for its adoption in furs. Still, this set leads one to possess so much the day when one need.

A deep sunken fringe is more in keeping with the stole of satin. The scarf [illegible] while [illegible] figure and become [illegible] tive as a [illegible] white [illegible] are quite a perky touch to a very novel and altogether charming stole of the finest moleskin, which forms two waist-deep points at the back—each one finished and weighted into position by a tassel—while its long and wide ends are overlaid in other deep points onto a bordering of seal musquash.

This wrap is for older women, to whom also I recommend a certain charming creation of moleskin and marabout in [illegible] shading of the fur, the moles forming a deep cape-like curve at the back and being then continued into very wide stole ends. The inner half, which is gathered into the shoulder piece, being, however, of the marabout, which when the [illegible] is wrapped about the neck is of more adjustable and so becoming effect. This, in addition to the long, straight scarfs and stoles, there are any number of neat and quaintly shaped [illegible] which seem to have borrowed the inspiration for their shape from either cod or herring. But all of these [illegible] an effect of maturity, and you are not obvious; [illegible] aged you will be wise to [illegible] them by

Are You Envious? Modest? A Tyrant to Your Wife? Maybe You're Only Timid

Ten Little Lessons on the Curse of Cowardice

By Yoritomo-Tashi
The Great Japanese Philosopher.

LESSON ONE—Timidity—the Curse!

WHAT is timidity? It is doubt of ourselves, wedded to a much too honorable opinion of ourselves. It may be that some day the lamb and the lion will couch together—but it is not well to have the spirit that is of the forequarters of a lamb and the hind quarters of a lion. It is a delectably absurd animal for a soul. Timidity prevents us from realizing our best ambitions. Besides doubt and excessive self-love its cause is a fear of displeasing or of not making a [illegible] effect. This gives the [illegible] becoming feeling of awk[illegible] you are [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

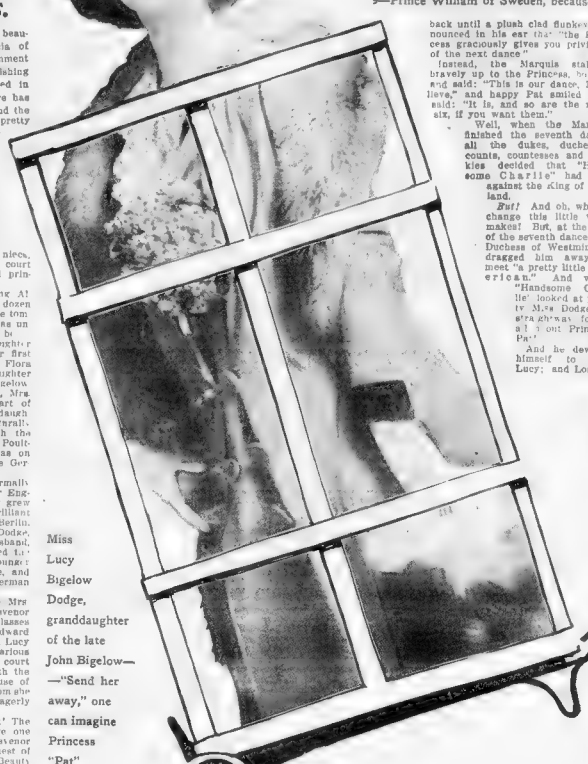
JEALOUS PRINCESS "PAT"

Why It's "Always on the Move" for a Charming American Girl Who Made the "Loveliest Royal Spinster" Angry by an Innocent Dance with the Marquis She Loves.

The Royal Suitors Princess "Pat" Has "Turned Down" for Her Marquis

1—King Alfonso of Spain, because of his bad ancestry.
2—King Manuel of Portugal, because of his bad character.
3—Crown Prince of Germany, because he was too flirtatious.
4—Prince Eitel Fritz of Germany, because he was fat and gluttonous.
5—Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, because he was effeminate.
6—Prince Christopher of Greece, because he was a poor soldier.
7—Prince Gustavus of Denmark, because he was too near a relation.
8—Grand Duke Michael of Russia, because he was a brute.
9—Prince William of Sweden, because he was too thin and lanky.



Miss Lucy Bigelow Dodge, granddaughter of the late John Bigelow—"Send her away," one can imagine Princess "Pat" crying.

Princess Patricia of Connaught, Who Won't Be Married Until She Can Get the Man She Wants.

WITH the arrival of the beautiful Princess Patricia of Connaught at Government House, Ottawa, a most astonishing state of affairs has developed in Canadian social circles. There has been a great social mix-up, and the former belle of Ottawa, the pretty Lucy Bigelow Dodge, wasn't there to greet the royal visitor.

There is a curious and interesting story back of the present state of affairs.

All the world knows Princess Pat: She is the one romantic princess of the entire British Empire. She is a daughter of the Duke of Connaught, uncle to the present King of England. And she was King Edward's favorite niece, and had more privileges at court than any of the other royal princesses.

She refused to marry King Alfonso, King Manuel, and a dozen dukes and princes. She is the toy boy of the royal family, and as un conventional as any girl can be.

Miss Dodge is the only daughter of Mrs. Lionel Guest by her first husband. Mrs. Guest was Flora Bigelow, the youngest daughter of the late John Bigelow. While Lucy was growing up, Mrs. Dodge spent the greater part of each year in England. As a daughter of John Bigelow, she naturally was on intimate terms with the British royal family, and as Poultney Bigelow's sister she was on the warmest terms with the German Emperor.

Mrs. Dodge could so informally to visit either the German or English royal families. As Lucy grew up, she had a wonderfully brilliant social career in London and Berlin.

In the meantime Mrs. Dodge, having divorced her first husband, Charles Stuart Dodge, married Henry Oraule Lionel Guest, a younger son of the Baron Wimborne, and oddly enough British and German society did not frown!

After her second marriage Mrs. Guest took a house in Grosvenor Square, and entertained all classes of English society. King Edward was a frequent visitor. Then Lucy came out. She attended various royal balls, was presented at court and became great friends with the Princess Pat. Perhaps because of the lovely Pat's love of freedom she has always made friends eagerly with American girls.

Then came the fateful night! The Duchess of Westminster gave one of her sumptuous balls at Grosvenor House. Princess Pat was guest of honor, and the American Beauty was also a guest. At this ball was the handsome, debonair, extremely wealthy Marquis of Anglesea. For months London had gossiped about the Marquis and the Princess. At this ball fuel was added to the fire of rumor! "Handsome Charlie" broke the rules of royal etiquette by asking the Princess to dance with him. He should have hung back until a plush clad flunkey announced in his ear that "the Princess graciously gives you privilege of the next dance."

Instead, the Marquis stalked bravely up to the Princess, bowed, and said: "This is our dance, I believe," and happy Pat smiled and said: "It is, and so are the next six, if you want them."

Well, when the Marquis finished the seventh dance, all the dukes, duchesses, counts, countesses and flunkies decided that "Handsome Charlie" had won against the King of England.

But! And oh, what a change this little word makes! But, at the end of the seventh dance, the Duchess of Westminster dragged him away to meet "a pretty little American." And when "Handsome Charlie" looked at pretty Miss Dodge he straightway forgot all about Princess Pat.

And he devoted himself to Miss Lucy; and London turned a deep purple. Of course, every one, from King Edward down, knew that "Handsome Charlie" was flesh. Had to be paid and sit at tourneys to Ruth Burke, Gladys Vanderbilt, Lady Ivy Gordon-Lennox and a dozen other beauties and heiresses.

King Edward was terribly angry, and suggested to the Marquis that he go abroad indefinitely. He went to Austria.

The next move concerned the Guests. It was intimated to Mrs Guest that the England's Rose was dangerous with her charming young daughter! Almost immediately Miss Dodge left London and came to New York to stay with her venerable grandfather.

The Guests hastily closed their London house and exiled themselves to Canada.

The Honorable Lionel, whom was several years younger than his wife owned several large ranch properties in Canada. It was announced officially that he had to live in Canada to look after his large interests there. So far, so good!

Miss Lucy grieved sorely for her English friends. Whether she has ever been in love with "Handsome Charlie" no one can say. After a few weeks in New York, she joined her mother and stepfather in Canada.

Earl Grey was Governor-General Government House at Ottawa was very brilliant. The Greys made much of the Guests, and pretty Lucy rapidly became the belle of the Government circle.

For two winters Miss Dodge led a most fortunate existence.

Then, oh, woe! The Greys were recalled! And who was chosen to take the place of the popular [illegible] Duke of Connaught! Was anything ever queerer? Here was the enemy invading the retreat of the American queen!

Canada, to this day, does not know why the Greys were recalled. No deep political reason was given. Out of a clear sky came the recall, and the Dominion hardly recovered itself before the word came that the Connaughts were to succeed.

Mrs. Guest has announced that she will [illegible] taking Miss Dodge with her. With the Connaughts in Canada, there is now no reason why the late exiles should avoid London.

What a queer state of affairs! The American beauty driven from England by an unfortunate [illegible] she is driven from Canada by the very [illegible] princess! And all on account of a marquis!

The Golgotha of America Where Countless Beauties Were Strangled for the Sun

THE Golgotha of America is the name applied to the ruins of Pachacamac, in Peru, by Dr Ales Hrdlicka, of the Smithsonian Institution, who recently collected on the site of that ancient Peruvian city more than 3,400 skulls and immense quantities of the long bones of human skeletons, forwarding them to the National Museum in Washington.

The whole place seemed to be one vast cemetery. But most remarkable of all was the discovery, on the southeast terrace of the once-magnificent Temple of the Sun, of ninety graves, all of them occupied by women. And not one of these women had died a natural death. All of them had been killed by strangling—the supposition being that they were sacrificed to the Sun God.

Of the manner in which they died there could be no doubt, inasmuch as the bodies had been mummified in the prehistoric Peruvian manner, by drying, and then enclosed in wrappings. In most cases they were fairly well preserved, and in some the strangulating cords were still around their necks. None of the individuals was old, and the likelihood seems to be that they were young women chosen by reason of their beauty as suitable for sacrifice to the solar divinity.

The ruins of Pachacamac are situated only eighteen miles south of Lima, and one may travel half of that distance by trolley in these modern days. They are most picturesquely located on heights overlooking a beautiful green valley, and conspicuous among them are the remains of two huge temples—both pre-Columbian—an ancient inca convent, and a vast fortress-like central structure which may have been a palace. One of the temples was dedicated to the Creator, or Supreme Being, called Pachacamac; the other was the shrine of the Sun.

This was the greatest religious centre in America in pre-Columbian times, being comparable to the ancient Egyptian Thebes or the modern Mohammedan Mecca. To it flocked pilgrims from all parts of Peru—a country which at that period embraced modern Peru, Ecuador, Bolivia and Chile. Its decline dates from the arrival of the Spaniards—in 1533—who smashed the statue of Pachacamac and destroyed pretty nearly everything that was not worth carrying away. The city was desecrated, pilgrims no longer came to its desecrated shrines and nothing was left behind but ruins and a vast number of graves.

Pachacamac was the chief seat of ecclesiastic jurisdiction in prehistoric Peru. The residence of the most exhalted prelates and priests, who spent their lives in worship and in the observance of elaborate ceremonials. Its temples and palaces were built of carved stone, and filled with enormous accumulations of gold and silver for purposes both ornamental and useful. The walls of the apartments were covered with sheets of beaten gold, and the altars of the idols were strewn with golden vessels. Tapestries woven of vicuna wool in unique and beautiful designs lent elegance to the interiors, and upon the floors were spread the skins of wild beasts from the forests of the Andes.

The walls of the rooms, often carved with hieroglyphs commemorating events in the history of the nation, the ceilings, and even the floors were inlaid with plates of gold—to which fact was probably due in some measure the destruction accomplished by the Spaniards, who stole the treasures of all kinds and left the splendid edifices dismantled. Other apartments had floors of vari-colored marbles arranged in mosaic-like patterns, and in niches around the walls stood images of gold and silver representing all sorts of animals.

The temples literally blazed with gold—particularly that of the Sun, which was so situated that the first morning rays of the orb of day were thrown directly through its great eastern portal, lighting up its interior, the latter so lined and decorated with the yellow metal as to give back a shine like an enormous lamp.

Near by was the Temple of the Moon, all the decorations of which were silver. The stars, the thunder, the lightning and the rainbow each had a temple, and all the vessels and other objects associated with ceremonial observances in these shrines were of the precious metals.

One gets the notion of the plentifulness of the precious metals in the Peru of those days from the fact that the ransom paid by the Inca Atahualpa to the Spaniards was (according to their own historians) a large room piled with elaborately-wrought ornaments and utensils of gold and silver, "as high as a man could reach."

Mummy of One of the Ancient Beauties Sacrificed to the Sun at Pachacamac.

Nevertheless, the conquerors, whose appetite for gold and blood was unquenchable, murdered Atahualpa—in whose memory the public Peruvian women of pure descent wear even at the present time a black apron with a white border.

On the island of Coati (now a sheep farm), six miles from Titicaca, was maintained the harem of the Inca. The island was dedicated to the moon, and was the abode of young women who were selected for their beauty and lineage. The chief occupation was the spinning and weaving of garments of finest vicuna wool, in brilliant colors, and ornamenting them with gold and precious stones, for the monarch and the high priests. They also made the sacred bread of corn, which it was allowed to be eaten only by the high priests and the Incas.

On reaching a certain age these ladies were permitted to return to their homes, and were thereafter maintained in luxury at the expense of the government. The Inca had an unlimited number of concubines, but only one wife: the throne passing to the eldest legitimate son. The sons of the coya (queen) were educated for priests and officers of the royal household. At the time of the Spanish invasion there were 700 women on the island, each of whom was provided with several servants.

Returning to the city of Pachacamac. Among its most conspicuous ruins it has been mentioned that of a convent. This was an establishment occupied by the so-called Virgins of the Sun. All of them were daughters of chiefs, and their duties consisted in watching a sacred lamp—which was never allowed to go out—in making ceremonial garments for the high priests, and in helping to replenish the harem of the Inca when vacancies occurred owing to the retirement for age of its inmates.

There is every indication that the holy city of Pachacamac was very ancient at the period of the Spanish invasion. As already stated, it is one vast cemetery, and one can hardly dig anywhere among the ruins, the neighborhood of the ruins without coming on human remains. Mummies and skeletons are often planted two or three deep in and about the temples, and even about and within the prehistoric dwellings. There are numerous examples of skulls of both sexes and of children. Many of the skulls curiously enough are filled with cotton.

Being so easily accessible, it is not surprising that the ruins should have been much disturbed by vandals and curiosity-hunters. In fact, they have been pretty well dug over by peons, looking for treasure and gold ornaments, which have been carried to Lima. Incidentally, thousands of mummy bundles have been destroyed, and often the mummies and skeletons lying [illegible] the ground. The whole place wears the aspect of a Libyan battle field—according to Dr. Hrdlicka's description—skull and bones being scattered everywhere. This circumstance, however, was fortunate in one way, inasmuch as it rendered the collection of skeleton material easy. The best preserved specimens were roughly got together in sacks, transported on muleback to Lima, and there carefully packed for shipment to Washington.

If it be asked why it should be worth while to collect over 3,400 skulls of prehistoric Peruvians, the answer is that the object in view is to make a comprehensive study of the cranial development of these ancient people—a matter which has a most important bearing upon problems of race type and racial affiliations. One very interesting point about the crania is that most of them have not been artificially deformed—whereas the skulls hitherto dug up in Peru have been so commonly altered in shape by binding in infancy, to meet the demands of prehistoric fashion, that a normal specimen was actually a rarity.

Another odd fashion was that of trephining the skull. This is an operation which is now regarded as one of the last resorts of surgery by reason of the great danger involved, but among the ancient Peruvians it was very common. Among large collections of skulls nearly 2 per cent show signs of trephining, and there is plain evidence that in at least one-half of the cases the patients died under the knife, which was an exceedingly rude instrument of flint, with a saw edge. Occasionally a piece of silver or of shell was inserted in the hole made by removing the piece of bone. Usually the flap of scalp was merely joined over the aperture. In all probability the operation was performed for the cure of epilepsy, insanity, or other chronic headache, but doubtless in many instances where injury had been inflicted in battle.

"Nourish the starved muscles of the neck by feednig them liberally with cold cream."

By Mme. Lina Cavalieri

AT this time most fashionable women are looking anxiously at their necks, shoulders and arms. Winter is particularly unkind to all of these parts of the body.

The neck is always the sufferer when fashion decrees high collars. It is best to compromise with fashion by letting the collars and guimpes be of thin, soft material. When this is not possible the collars can be lined with white, even though you baste pieces of soft muslin or silk inside the collar for yourself. It is worth the effort to keep your neck clear, soft and white. Dark collars communicate their color in an ugly, sallow tone that is anything else than attractive. Or they cause a yellow skin difficult to remove.

Should you notice this unbecoming appearance, add to the daily bath with a complexion. ... soap and warm water an application at least once a ... as heralds before retiring.

Rose water	1 ounce
Bichloride of mercury .	6 grains

The ticklish ... keeping ... disturbing ... ening the supply of blood to these parts, causes premature wrinkling of the neck. The best ... to wear high collars ... Little as possible. At least do not wear them at home. Free your neck as soon as possible and nourish the starved muscles by feeding them liberally with a cold cream. Or a paste made as follows has the same effect, besides whitening the skin:

Liquid honey, one tablespoonful.
Juice of one lemon.
Whites of two eggs.
Mix these with enough fine oatmeal to make a fairly thick, smooth paste.

This is the answer for revealing the arms. If ... is possibly ... quires ... in low-cut, short-sleeved gown. The beautiful arm baths midway between these extremes. It should be frankly round and plump, but not fat. That it should be smooth and soft and white goes almost without saying. It might have all these desirable points, yet fall of beauty because it does not taper at the wrist.

If the arms are thin, gentle exercise and much light massage with oil, almond and olive in equal parts, with a few drops of benzoin for whitening the mixture, should gradually increase their size and curves. If they are too large, vigorous use of the exercise should reduce them, especially if they are bathed daily with an astringent, as for instance, with white wine vinegar, which whitens as well as reduces. Thin arms can be softened and fed by wearing loose, oily bandages about them at night. In the same way ... ls, pellucid ... may be beautified.

Should a girl dislikes to bare her arms because there is on them a dark growth of superfluous hair, ... her ... by ... cream ... hairs easily disappear. It makes them "look like monkeys." This depilatory powder, if used most carefully, will remove that hairy covering for a time. I must earnestly warn you, however, to be exceedingly careful in your use of it. Remove it the instant it begins to smart. If you do not your arms may be permanently disfigured.

Starch	.6 ounces
Quicklime .	..5 ounces
Orpiment .	½ ounce

Crush each of these into a fine powder. Mix well and keep ... in a ... closed jar or bottle.

When the depilatory is needed pour a teaspoonful into a saucer. Add enough warm water to make a thin paste. Spread this on the hairy parts of the arms with a dull paper knife, or any smooth, flat instrument with a blunt edge. When the smearing begins scrape off the paste at once. The hair should come off at the same time. Better apply to the skin, whether it seems inflamed by this treatment or not, a healing lotion, as equal parts of witch hazel and glycerine.

What I have said of keeping the neck and arms in good condition applies to the shoulders. Carry the body well and your shoulders will be firm and graceful. Carry the head well and both shoulders and neck will be of attractive outline.

The shoulders and arms, if disfigured by blotches or redness, will be improved by the use of:

Elder flower water.....	6 ounces
Glycerine	½ ounce
Pulverized borax	½ drams

Or this formula:

Orange flower water....	6 ounces
Pulverized borax	3 drams
Glycerine	½ ounce

Apply freely to the reddened or blotched surfaces.

Beauty Questions Answered

C. R. writes to ask a brief description of face massage.

The best face massage is a gentle slapping with your own palms that have been covered with cold cream. Fifteen minutes are enough.

L. K. Wishes directions for making the hair "darker and curly."

A mild tea made of burdock is the old German hair darkener. Being of vegetable origin, it has not the injurious effects of ordinary dyes. Shaking the hair, by catching handfuls of it by the ends and loosening the hairs from their clinging, individual neighbor, is the means followed by Anna Held, who has beautiful hair, to make it soft and fluffy.

But if your hair is not naturally curly the kid-covered curlers are the only substitutes I know to make up the lack. These compounds, I have understood, have been used with success, though I do not give them my personal indorsement:

Quince seed, one tablespoonful.
Rainwater, one pint.

Bruise the seeds. Boil the mixture gently until the quantity is reduced three-quarters of a pint.

Strain the liquid and when it has cooled add to it four tablespoonfuls of cologne. Apply this to the hair with a small sponge. After dampening the hair with this roll on curlers.

This liquid has also its friends who claim for it efficacy, and, since it has no harmful ingredients, there should be no objection to trying it.

Pure rosewater,	½ pint.
Pulverized gum arabic,	3 ozs.

Strain through cheesecloth.

Apply this to the hair before arranging it. The bandoline will keep the "waves" in place as you arrange them.

E. R. C. writes: "Kindly tell me what I shall do for an obstinate case of falling hair."

Now and then it is well to diminish the heat in the head by applying lumps of ice wrapped in soft cloths or towels, to the part of the head that is hot—any part but the back of the head. The shock to that part I have found too great. Or the application of soft towels or cloths dipped in hot water and often renewed will drive the excess of blood from the head.

Alcohol is cooling for the time. I have frequently rubbed it into my scalp, especially when the scalp was perspiring. It is, besides being cooling, a strong disinfectant, ridding the scalp of microbes that are enemies to the hair.

Of internal remedies for and preventives of thinning hair, which is the precursor of baldness, a well known physician gave this:

Tincture of Jaborandi.
Take five to thirty drops in water, four times a day.
Also ...
Sulphurous acid, 2 ozs.
Syrup of orange flower, 2 ozs.
Take a teaspoonful in water three times a day.
Syrup of hypophosphytes, 5 ozs.
Aloin, 2 grains.
Take one teaspoonful three times a day.

Of local applications I recommend for falling hair that is "dry" this:

Mercury oleate, 2 ozs.
Oil of ergot, 2 ozs.

If bald spots appear after illness improvement has been quickly shown when this preparation is used:

Glycerine, 4 ozs.
Rectified spirits, 1 pint.
Sublimed sulphur,	½ oz.
Tincture of cantharides,	½ oz.

The best way to apply this is to wet the bald spots with it three times a day, rubbing it in well with a soft, old tooth brush.

Stimulating to the new hair that has been coaxed to grow and which is of infant like weakness when it first appears is:

Deodorized alcohol,	½ pint.
Oil of mace,	¼ oz.

Apply in the same way as the foregoing.

When the hair refuses to ... to freely shampooing daily until the possible destructive microbe has been banished.

V. R. says: "I am fourteen years of age, and I weigh 168 pounds, and would like your advice as to how to become thinner. I feel as though I am ridiculed by every one. Also kindly advise me how to rid myself of dark freckles."

If you were full grown I should advise eating but one meal a day, exercising much out of doors and sleeping an hour or two less a day. But since you are of a growing age I will not take the responsibility of such advice without your first consulting a physician. If you are at fourteen full grown, as are some persons, this advice will apply.

Dark freckles should be treated as lighter ones. This is a harmless bleach. Apply it to the freckles with a camel's hair brush. If it reddens and stings the skin, do not be alarmed.

Lactic acid,	2 ozs.
Glycerine,	1 oz.
Rosewater,	½ oz.

Afterward allay the burning by applying any soothing cold cream.

This remedy, known as Marchand's, has been most effective in hundreds of cases of obstinate freckles that I have known:

An ounce bottle of hydrozone.
An ounce bottle of glycozone.

First bathe the face thoroughly with warm, soapy water. Then with a soft camel's-hair brush apply to the skin the hydrozone, weakened by mixing it with an equal quantity of water. Allow it to dry on the skin. Though a stinging, itching sensation follow, this need not be alarming. Then gently apply the glycozone in the same way.

Do this every night and morning until the freckles have disappeared. After that make the application at least once a week to prevent the return.

A. H. B. asks for "hints about premature gray hairs."

Those hairs are in themselves hints that your scalp is not in good condition. The farmer prepares the soil before he sows his crop, and after he has sowed the crop he cultivates the soil. Look well to the soil from which your hair grows. Keep the skin cool and moist and loose from the scalp. If the scalp be dry and scabby take frequent shampoos and after each rub lanoline thoroughly into the roots of the hair. Many have faith in the hair growing qualities of vaseline. My objection to that is it is of mineral origin. I prefer cosmetics made from animal fats or vegetable oils. Massage your scalp every morning until the skin moves easily upon the scalp. Brush it gently once a day with long strokes, giving it at least one hundred strokes. Use a cooling hair lotion. This is cooling and stimulating:

Rosewater, 6 ozs
Brandy, 2 ozs.
Castor oil, 1 oz.
Ammonia, 1 oz.

Or, if your hair is oily, this is better:

Alcohol, 5 ozs.
Cocoanut oil, 1½ ozs.
Tincture of nux vomica, 4 drams.
Tincture of alcoholic cantharides, 2 drams.
Tincture of capsicum, 1 dram.

Superfluous Hair.

Will you tell me if there is any way to permanently destroy a disfiguring growth of superfluous hair on my face and arms? I am 500 years old and the growth is very bad. Mrs. M. is sister, who is 22, is also very troubled. I have been told that depilatories are unreliable and that nothing is effective except the needle. Is needle safe? I am 17, and I am afraid it is painful. I should be glad if you would give me your advice. CHARLOTTE K.

A Basket Shape Made by Miss Draper from Braided Crepe Paper.

By Julia R. Draper

FOR my idea of making pretty and useful articles out of braided crepe paper I am indebted to Aunt Hulda Eccliston, the New England woman who became self-supporting by carrying out a original idea of making ... things of braided corn h... as shield the readers of this newspaper st Stamp.

What ... pressed me in reading "Aunt Hulda's" story was her comfortingwell-f that there are always thousand ways of one's hand ... of only one ref...eam it in the ... ght ...

But I was a city wo..., which put corn husks out o... question—and saved me from coming an out-and-out imitator of Aunt Hulda." However, I took her advice—I sat down and tried to think the thing out in the ... spirit. Presto! came the idea th... braiding crinkly crepe paper wou... enable me to duplicate "Aunt Hulda's" success. Besides, I would have an added advantage in the many lovely colors and tints in which this paper is manufactured.

I set to work at once to carry out the idea and the result was even more charming than I had anticipated, for the delicately-colored papers were amazingly effective. I designed endless shapes and forms, and besides being beautiful, the things that one can make of this braided paper are practical and useful.

It is the easiest fancy work to do that I have ever undertaken. First, you cut the crepe paper across the roll, never lengthwise, as it will not plait properly or look well. This, of course, leaves countless ends to be ... an easy matter, for one has only to ... inch and a half and ... braided in, being careful to tuck under any little protruding edges.

One may make any number of strands to a braid or plait, but I have found that the ... braid is the most ... and ... such a bag in one ... and it makes a beautiful ...

In making bath mats ... soles are fashioned first; ... the upper part is made and attached. I have found that it is more ... factory to have the soles double, ... that is, one makes two soles for ... each slipper and then they are sewn together securely after the upper part is put on.

I have made a great many of these slippers in all sorts of colors. They sell at once at a fair, for they are singularly attractive. If one cares to, one may put bows or rosettes on them, but I think they are play, for with the braid in one's hands the work proves very easy and one learns to ease or tighten the plait according to the shape desired. It really is astonishing how easy to do.

I have made all sorts of things out of these colored paper braids, and it seems as if I could go on ... like Tennyson's brook, inventing new shapes.

Attractive picture frames are made of the braided paper. This is an idea, however, that can be carried out in all sorts of shapes and designs. The square ones are very pretty, and then there are some in double form or even triple fold, standing up like a three or four-fold screen.

One of the photographs shows a very practical object—the cover for a thermos bottle. In making this I braided the paper very ... and used a pale, tan colored paper that made it look like a basket of braided grass. It was ... five ... the cover I made ... and ... I had ... [illegible]

LOOK BACKWARD SOMETIMES---AHEAD ALWAYS

Copyright, 1912, by the American-Journal-Examiner

A Man Should Go Forward Always; There Is No Standing Still. And a Man Should Look as Far Ahead as He Can. But Occasionally, in an Hour of Leisure and Solitude, It Is Important to Look BACK and Retrace Your Own Journey. WE MUST KNOW AND UNDERSTAND THE PAST OR WE CANNOT CONTROL THE FUTURE.

HOW many hours of "spare time" we all have, and waste!

Take one of those hours and devote it to an earnest, sober, careful review of what YOU have done, what YOU have been thus far in your life.

◆ ◆ ◆

Even in the career of a young man or woman there are many personalities different in innumerable ways.

If you can see yourself reviewing your life as you have been from your childhood to this day, you see not merely one single person under changing surroundings. You see in yourself a long line of different individuals—different in tastes, in beliefs, in ambition, in character.

◆ ◆ ◆

Pity the human being who has not in his lifetime been many persons, for such a one has not developed. Time has passed him by instead of taking him with it and adding to him.

Consider how different you are from the child you used to be twenty or thirty or fifty years, or even ten years ago!

That child that was YOU is as much a stranger to you, as much a curiosity as you look back upon it, as if you were studying the childhood of another person or of a being in another world.

The difference between what you are now and what you were as a child is not merely a difference in broader shoulders, in thin, gray hair, in tired face or swoolen body.

The difference is in the fact that you are a changed being, and more changed mentally than physically.

◆ ◆ ◆

You know that your body changes absolutely and disappears every seven years.

There is within us a constant process of building up and tearing down. The old cells vanish and are cast away in the processes of the body and new cells built up of the food that we absorb constitute a physically new man.

There is not in your body at this moment any atom of matter that was in the body seven or eight years ago, unless it be some diseased formation that the natural processes of health cannot destroy.

Of the thing you call "myself" there is absolutely nothing left of the creature that was born on your first birthday, except the spirit, the mental energy, the ATOM OF CONSCIOUSNESS created and named by your father and your mother.

At fourteen the body has disappeared and been renewed twice. And at seventy a man has developed and cast aside at least ten separate bodies.

◆ ◆ ◆

If the body changes absolutely, disappears as completely as the building that is torn down in the city to make room for a new building, how much does the mind change?

In reality, it is always the same, persistent, indestructible within this body, as it is within infinite eternity. The brain that you inherited from your father and from your mother many years ago you can hand on with its characteristics to the children that will follow you. That is THE GREATEST of the marvels of existence.

But our minds, acting upon a material world through our material bodies, are controlled and limited by the bodies in which they work, and by the environment IN WHICH they work.

Man cannot control the body to any great extent, except that he can keep it healthy. And he cannot add to the possibilities of the mind that was put in him at the hour of his birth. He can only give opportunity to his natural inheritance.

But man can control environment. He can, in spite of all theories to the contrary, control himself and his will.

◆ ◆ ◆

When you sit down to take stock of yourself and of your past life at this season, study yourself in the different surroundings under which you have lived, study yourself acting under the different influences that have been brought to bear upon you.

UNDERSTAND YOURSELF, question yourself, know your limitations and your strength as circumstances and trials have proved them. Realize that no opinion of yourself is of any value unless the opinion is based upon what you have ACTUALLY DONE AND HAVE ACTUALLY BEEN UNDER DIFFERENT CONDITIONS.

You can see what you were as a child. You can see what you did perhaps in poverty, how well you stood that common affliction, if poverty was your early lot.

You can study yourself in prosperity, if that was your first condition, and realize how well you stood that. Prosperity is harder to stand than poverty, and harder to overcome than poverty.

◆ ◆ ◆

Look back over the road that you have travelled, and look over it slowly, taking it year by year if you can. Better still, take the Summers and the Winters in succession

First, try to realize how much of all that time has been wasted. The man doesn't live who hasn't wasted the greater part of his time.

Time is none the less wasted because it is spent in some perfunctory work. Time is wasted in which a man is not doing THE BEST THAT HE CAN, and trying desperately to put himself in a position in which he can do better.

When you have looked over the past and have realized the time that you have wasted, then try to calculate how many hours and days and years have been devoted to your best efforts—lucky if you can find one year of good work all together.

No man to-day tries to run any kind of business enterprise without taking stock at intervals. Keep that fact in your mind.

No man would dream of success in the field of commercial or industrial competition if he didn't have in his mind clearly the past of his concern, and if he didn't have clearly mapped out before him the future of his concern.

Remember that you ARE YOUR ONE AND ONLY CONCERN. You have got to know about your past history distinctly, as the manufacturer knows about the output of his factory, and you have got to plan about your future just as carefully and minutely as the manufacturer plans for his output, his purchases of raw material and his probable market.

◆ ◆ ◆

Study yourself, understand yourself, take stock of yourself—BUT DON'T BE MORBID ABOUT YOURSELF.

Don't let your mind constantly dwell on yourself. Never groan about the past—that is gone. You can't change it, BUT YOU CAN USE IT TO HELP CONTROL THE FUTURE, AND YOU CAN LEARN LESSONS FROM IT.

Don't worry about the future. Energy used in worrying, like the energy that hisses out of a leaking steam pipe, can be used in better ways.

Once in a while—not too often, perhaps twice a year—look over your past.

Then look forward again, work hard with new courage and knowledge. And good luck and good opportunities go with you.

"JAKIE"

BY Montague Glass

AUTHOR OF "POTASH and PERLMUTTER"

Copyright, 1912, by the American-Journal-Examiner and the Frank A. Munsey Co.

WHEN Jakie Danberg, at the age of three, attained his religious majority, his father deemed it high time that he should pay for his board and lodging. Hence, Jakie was withdrawn from the Mangin Street School and instructed to seek a job. It proved to be an elusive matter, and every evening he returned to his father's home behind the delicatessen store on East Houston street with the seal of unsuccess on his chubby face.

"Vell?" his father interrogated. Sorrowfully Jakie shook his head.

"Vodt for a schmardt boy are you?" his father commented, and Jakie choked down the herring and potato which formed his evening meal, while his tears seasoned new the pungent viands.

By the dawn of the fourth week Jakie had roamed the financial district over and canvassed every office in the skyscrapers of the neighborhood. "Ain't yer got nuten for a young feller ter do?" was the burden of his inquiry, and a curt negative was the only answer.

At length he chanced upon the headquarters of the Chocolate Trust in the Algonquin Building. The boy in the outer room was asleep with his head on the desk, and Jakie deemed it best not to disturb him. He tiptoed into another office where a stenographer sat at her machine, plunged in the concluding chapters of a romantic novel. There he passed into a third room, in which an executive meeting was being held. Gathered around a long table were six directors whom Mr. Branscomb, the second vice-president, was addressing with impassioned gestures.

"It is an outrage," he declared, "that these duties should have been levied on manufactured chocolate. The goods were raw material, as appears by the statements which I have here." He paused to rummage among the papers on the table just as Jakie opened the door. "Boy," he said sharply, "tell Miss Doty to give you those customs statements."

Mr. Branscomb was totally wrapped up in his argument, and had no eyes for the identification of office boys, while the faculty of obedience was strong in Jakie. He turned on his heel without a word.

"Miss Doty," he cried, "dey want dem custom statements."

Mechanically and without lifting her glance from the absorbing page, she handed Jakie some yellow sheets of paper, which he delivered forthwith to Mr. Branscomb. In the meantime another matter had been mooted, and Jakie stood with the papers in his hands for some moments, until there was a lull in the general conversation.

"Go over to No. 200 Exchange place," said one of the directors, "and ask Mr. Eckhardt if he will be good enough to step around for a few moments."

Jakie laid the statements on the desk, and was off in a flash. He returned a few minutes later, before the legitimate incumbent whose duties he had usurped had awakened from his nap, and repaired immediately to the directors' room.

"He ain't in, sir," he announced. Miss Doty, who had concluded the last exciting chapter of her novel, followed him into the room, and arrived in time to hear him deliver his message.

"All right," Mr. Branscomb said, "get Mr. Henry Carr on the phone."

Miss Doty preceded him from the room, and as soon as he crossed the threshold she clutched him by the shoulder.

"What are you doing here?" she asked.

"Legge!" Jakie cried. "I'm woikin' here."

"Since when?"

"De big guy gimme de job," he replied.

"Who's that," she continued; "Mr. Branscomb?"

"Yeh," said Jakie, "Mr. Branscomb; dat's de wan."

"When did all this happen?" Miss Doty insisted.

"Just now," Jakie cried, and in the midst of a further colloquy Mr. Branscomb burst out of the directors' room.

"Well," he demanded, "why don't you get Mr. Carr on the wire?" Miss Doty made it clear her employer, who held out 50 cents to Jakie.

"Go downstairs and get me three cigars," he said. "Tell the man they're for Mr. Branscomb."

Jakie took the money and descended to the lower hall.

"Gimme t'ree seegars for Mr. Branscomb," he said to the man behind the counter. The tobacconist handed him three cigars with elaborate gold bands and pocketed the 50-cent piece which Jakie placed on top of the show case. Jakie held the cigars gingerly in his left hand, but made no movement toward leaving.

"What are you waiting for?" the man asked.

Jakie laughed raucously. "Say," he said, "wot yer tryin' ter do? Kid me? Don't I get no change?"

"You certainly do not," the salesman replied emphatically.

"G'wan, I give yer half a dollar, didn't I?" Jakie rejoined. "Seegars don't cost no t'ree for fifty cents."

"These do," said the salesman.

"C'marn, now!" Jakie coaxed; "cough up dat t'irty-five cents. It ain't mine, honest. It belongs ter de bawss."

The cigar man came suddenly from behind the counter. "You get right out of this," he cried, "or I'll fan your breeches."

"Miss Doty," he cried, "dey want dem custom statements."

Jakie ran up the hall. "Aw right fer youse, yer fat slob!" he cried. "I'll tell Mr. Branscomb on yer."

"Here, what's all this about?" said a voice at his elbow. It was Mr. Branscomb himself who spoke.

Jakie turned quickly. "Here's yer seegars, Mr. Branscomb," he said, "an' dat big stuff dere is tryin' ter hold out t'irty-five cents on yer."

"They're the usual kind," the salesman protested, "and there isn't any change."

"Why, of course not," Mr. Branscomb replied; "and say, young man, what are you doing around my office, anyway?"

Jakie stared at his new employer in grieved astonishment. "Why," he gasped, "I'm woikin' for youse, Mr. Branscomb, ain't I."

"Are you?" Mr. Branscomb commented dryly; "and, pray, who hired you?"

This was too much for Jakie, who saw his new job melting into thin air; and he gulped once or twice in an effort to stem the gathering tears.

Mr. Branscomb placed his arm around the lad's shoulders. "Let's go upstairs," he said, "and talk it over."

They entered the elevator and repaired once more to the executive offices of the National Chocolate and Cocoa Company. Miss Doty and the legitimate incumbent both disclaimed knowledge as to the time or manner of Jakie's advent, and, after a rigid examination into his antecedents, he found himself employed as assistant office boy at the generous stipend of $4 a week.

When Jakie returned to his delicatessen home that evening, his face was wreathed in so wide a smile that the elder Feinberg stopped midway in the slicing of a smoked tongue. "Might you got a job?" his father and mother inquired with one voice. Jakie nodded assent calls.

"Moreover," cried the elder Feinberg, seizing link by link a chain of frankfurters, "you should fry sahm wurst for de boy's soppaire." And he cut off the last two sausages with a blow of his knife that blended pride and generosity in one eloquent sweep.

II.

UNDOUBTEDLY, Miss Doty constituted her own ideal of a well-dressed woman. Everything about her person betokened a superlative taste, from the broad bows on her shoes to the last undulation of her pompadour, which was a wonder of size and construction. Moreover, she commanded and received from every adjacent masculine eye the attention that a judicious use of the rouge pot and powder puff will attract.

Now, there was just enough Irish in James Walsh, the legitimate incumbent—his mother was Wicklow and his father red Kerry—to give him a certain way with the ladies, and he made 5 cents worth of milk chocolate go the length of a pound of Huyler's with Miss Doty. Besides, Jimmie was old for his age, and his age was old for his job.

But Jakie represented a long line of ancestry whose interest in womankind was purely academic; and in form a disposition to discuss, in the abstract, the Talmudical and Mosaic laws of marriage and divorce. If he speculated at all on her raiment, it was as to its cost, not its beauty, and her pompadour passed him by unnoticed. As for milk chocolate, his weekly allowance of 15 cents forbade such extravagance, even had the thought of them occurred to him.

This, at least, was the situation during the first few weeks of Jakie's employment. His duties were neither arduous nor exacting, and he performed them all, and most of James Walsh's, cheerfully and promptly. In fact, after Jakie's advent there was little for the office boy in chief to do but flirt with Miss Doty and sleep, for which he had an insatiable appetite.

One afternoon Jakie returned from his lunch to find Miss Doty in the arms of the sixteen-year-old James Walsh. There was but one construction to be placed on the matter, and Jakie saw his duty clear. He walked boldly up to the abashed couple.

"I congradulate youse bote," he said gravely, and proffered his hand to Miss Doty. Marrying and giving in marriage is so common an occurrence on the East Side that the proper phrase rose blithely to Jakie's lips. Besides, he knew the symptoms, for on Summer nights the tenement stoops of Mangin street are crowded with just such scenes, ever greeted with, "I congradulate youse bote," and concluding with a large wedding in a public hall.

The conventional reply of the engaged couple is a blushing thanqs, pronounced "t'enks"; but in this case, while James Walsh emitted the reply, and it was far from conventional.

"Yer dirty, sneakin' kike," he growled, "come outside and I'll knock yer block awff!"

He was a good twenty pounds heavier than Jakie, and head and shoulders taller; but, as he grabbed Jakie by the shoulders and violently propelled him into the hall, nothing remained to the latter but to defend himself. Then it was that his training at the Neighborhood Club on Willett street stood him in good stead.

No doubt, it was James Walsh's intention to end the matter in one terrific onslaught, for the blows he aimed at Jakie in force and number were sufficient to have reduced him to the consistency of beef extract. But Jakie avoided them all. He sidestepped and clinched like a veteran, and in the break-away managed to plant one or two short arm jabs where they would do the most good. Just as Mr. Branscomb stepped from the elevator, Jakie brought the conflict to an abrupt close with a stinging blow on James Walsh's upturned nose. It followed three wallops to the same member, and James took the count.

"Here, you young rascal!" Mr. Branscomb exclaimed, "what's all this about?"

Walsh rose sullenly to his feet and Jakie, smoothing his hair with one hand, maintained a discreet silence.

"James," asked his employer, "how did you get into this mess?"

But James was making a desperate effort to cope with his rising emotions, and merely shook his head.

"Come inside, both of you," said Mr. Branscomb, and the two culprits followed him into the directors' room.

"Now, what's all this about?" he repeated.

"Well," Jakie commenced, "he called me outer me name. Ain't dat right?" He turned to James Walsh for corroboration, since he deemed it best to make common cause against the loss of their jobs. James nodded sullenly.

"So," Jakie went on, "we got mad an' scrapped."

Mr. Branscomb sat down at his desk with an air of decision. "You'll both leave on Saturday," he announced; "we can't have any loafers fighting around here."

The two unfortunates filed out, exchanging malevolent glances, and passed into the anteroom. They sat in silence on opposite ends of the bench for a quarter of an hour, when Jakie rose to his feet and walked rapidly into the directors' room. He had made a brave resolve and was afraid to give himself thinking time.

"Mr. Branscomb," he commenced, "kin I say sumpin'?"

The second vice-president waved his hand in permission.

"Now, I ain't got no kick comin' because I gets fired, see?" he continued, "but James Walsh, outside, is up against it."

"How so?" Mr. Branscomb asked.

"Well, he's engaged," said Jakie.

"Engaged?"

"Dat's right, Mr. Branscomb; he's engaged to Miss Doty."

Jakie looked hurt at the peal of laughter with which Mr. Branscomb greeted his announcement. Several minutes passed before the second vice-president recovered his composure sufficient to enunciate.

"Call him in," he said.

In response, James shambled into the directors' room and blinked solemnly out of his one open eye. His snub nose was swollen to such dimensions that it vied even with Jakie's Hebraic organ.

"James," Mr. Branscomb commenced gravely, "what is this I hear about your proposed alliance?"

"Huh?" James Walsh grunted.

"I understand that Miss Doty is the fortunate lady," his employer continued.

The rest of James Walsh's puffed features assumed the hue of his nose. "Say, Mr. Branscomb," he protested, "I don't know wot dis kid has been givin' yer, but"——

"To put it more plainly," Mr. Branscomb interrupted, "he says that he thinks I ought to give you back your job because you're engaged to be married to Miss Doty."

"Aw, he's daffy!" James Walsh blurted out.

Jakie turned in astonishment face toward his confrere.

"Why," he exclaimed, "ain't youse engaged?"

"Aw, cut it out," James Walsh rejoined and abruptly left the room.

Jakie shifted from foot to foot in his embarrassment. He certainly had made a messo fit, he cogitated; but then, again, weren't their actions those of an engaged couple?

"I guess you'd better go outside," Mr. Branscomb interrupted, "and tell Miss Dity I'd like to see her."

Sorrowfully Jakie departed and delivered his message. Then he repaired to the outer office to sit with the sulky James Walsh, whose presence alone stemmed his impending tears. How was he to know that Miss Doty and James Walsh were just friends and nothing more? Surely, appearances were against them; but then Miss Doty was such a lady—nicer than the teacher of 6A grade in the Mangin Street School. Yes, she certainly was a—

Here the tide of his reflection was interrupted by the person herself, who bounced into the outer office with her hat pinned on awry. As she passed by Jakie she hissed the one word "sneak," and to James Walsh the equally offensive term "idiot." Then she banged the hall-door behind her and was gone. Mr. Branscomb followed on her heels, smiling grimly.

"James," he said, "you're a pretty good judge of women for a boy your age. On your way home tonight, stop in at the International Typewriter Company and pick out a homely stenographer. Tell her to come early to-morrow morning."

He turned from the hulking James Walsh to Jakie, whose eyes were bright with unshed tears.

"And you, Jakie," he said, "the next time you want to fight, pick out a man your own size." He started to enter the inner office. "Oh, by the way," he called out, "I forgot to say that you both keep your jobs until further notice."

Jakie sat on the bench swinging his legs, too stunned to realize his good fortune. Soon he recovered his wits, and again the thoughts chased one another through his brain. If Miss Doty and James Walsh embraced, he reflected, it must have been on account of motives of friendship. On the other hand, he was friends with many girls in the neighborhood of the delicatessen store; but never once had he put his arm around them. Then, like a thunderclap, the true significance of the affair overcame him. He had spoiled it all.

"Say," he groaned, "youse two wuz secretly engaged. Ain't dat right?"

James Walsh surveyed the agitated Jakie with his remaining useful eye. "Shurrup," he bellowed, "or I'll lift de face off'n yer."

And when a few moments later Mr. Branscomb departed for the day, he found them sitting on opposite ends of the bench, giving vent to their emotions in comforting tears.

COASTING.—Take four saucers of mother's snow pudding she was saving for company, spread it carefully over the bulkhead doors, get out your sleds and you will find the coasting excellent.

SKATING.—Take one pair Kentucky XXX skates, part size; put them firmly on the inside, and you will find it is slippery enough anywhere to skate up or down stairs, along the sidewalk, into lamp-posts and practically everywhere else.

SKIING.—Take an ordinary pair of skis, bore a dozen holes in them. Next remove the casters from the parlor furniture and insert them in the holes in the skis. Now climb to the top of a long, grassy hill, and ski away until they send for the ambulance.

SNOWBALLING.—Take one roll ordinary cotton and two quarts vanilla ice cream. Mix the ice cream and the coton into snowballs and pelt each other. If light clothes are worn instead of dark, use chocolate ice cream in order to keep account of the number of times you hit the mark.

CURLING.—Take the art square up from the dining-room floor, move the furniture out. Take a whitewash brush and paint the floor with three pounds of butter. Mark off the course with stripes painted with black enamel. Take mother's flatirons and you will soon acquire great skill in sliding them along the buttered floor.

TOBOGGANING.—Select a large barn. Remove all the hay and heap it under the eaves on the outside. Now erect ladders on the opposite side and climb to the ridgepole, hauling up your toboggans. Slide down and land on the hay. With extreme care and great fortune you may do this as much as twice before the surgeons are called to dig the toboggan out of you.

Is Your Birthday This Week?

(Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.)

JAN. 21.—A child born of African parents on this day of the month will be dark complexioned and addicted to watermelon and chicken, and, while quite progressive sartorially as far as means will allow, will not care for such modern inventions as the safety razor.

JAN. 22.—On this day of the month all female children will become fond of dress and fudge, and young men, by the time they attain the age of seventeen. The boy babies, while quite normal otherwise, will object to having their necks washed and will prefer baseball and hockey to attending school.

JAN. 23.—Children born this date of extremely wealthy parents are in great danger of meeting an untimely end before they have attained their majority and the Coroner is apt to report that in his belief the automobile was traveling about ninety miles an hour when the accident happened.

JAN. 24.—Boys born on this date in Russia of Russian parents are inclined to favor heavy beards, heavy vodka and heavy garments, but despite this they will be exceedingly timid every time they see a round from ball with a fuse sputtering from it. Girls born in this country will be extremely fond of tea, made up of half a lemon, nine parts rum and one part tea.

JAN. 25.—Girl babies born on this date will be fond of matinees and at an early age aspire to the stage. If they attain their desires and become stars they will doubtless contract the husband-habit to a remarkable extent, unless the male population moves away from Pittsburg. Boys born this date will be considerably interested in musical comedy and will probably search out the nearest approach to stage doors before they have cast their first vote.

JAN. 26.—This is an unusually good date for a birthday, inasmuch as in later life the boys will be better able to celebrate it than at the last of the month when they are saving to pay monthly bills or at the first of the month when they are broke, as a result of settling. Boys with considerable leadership and the right pull with the district political boss may become great statesmen, providing it isn't an off year when they run.

JAN. 27.—A child born of poor parents on this day of the month will have to work. It may be at manual labor, but if it be a girl baby she will doubtless work some octogenarian by the time she is eighteen and then move to Easy street. Boys will work also, either the voters or society in general. Having known what it is to be poor they will have little sympathy for the poor when they attain affluence

I DECIDED that I needed a few pairs of hose so I went into a big department store and, walking up to the young lady behind the gents' furnishing counter, I said:

"Young miss, I want to get a nice, soft, dressy men's silk hose."

"Fifty, seventy-five or a dollar?" queried the young woman.

"Oh, the best you've got," I answered.

So she rolled around looking for hose on the shelves for some time and finally leaned down a pair of hose and said:

"Here is the real thing we sports have."

"Pardon me, Lady," I said, "but I want to wear SILVER cords in gents' hose."

DOWN in Tennessee a smallpox epidemic broke out and, as is customary, everybody had to be vaccinated.

Accordingly, the doctors set out on their mission and one of the medicos came to the house of an old colored mammy, a real old girl of the South. The doctor went up to the door and knocked. Mammy responded. The doctor said:

"Mammy, there's an epidemic of smallpox going the rounds and I find it my duty to vaccinate you."

Old Mammy answered:

"Doctuh, Ah cain't be vaccinated, 'cause Ah makes mah libbin' washin' clothes."

"Oh, well, we can easily overcome that by vaccinating you on the lower limbs," the doctor assured her.

"Cain't be vaccinated on de lower limbs, Doctuh, 'cause Ah makes mah libbin washin' clothes, an' Ah uses mah limbs in walkin' 'round 't cher washtub. Dat am de way Ah makes mah libbin'."

"Well, my dear madam, I can't argue the thing with you. I am here to help you and at the same time comply with the law, which says that it is necessary to vaccinate you on some portion of your anatomy."

Mammy looked the doctor over carefully and said:

"Do you know, Doctuh, Ah nebber do have much time to sit down."

HENRY and his brother went bear hunting. Henry had to do a lot of coaxing, because William, his brother, had a wooden leg and didn't feel equal to the task of hunting out any bear. But Henry had a new gun and he wanted to try it out, so William finally agreed to go along.

Henry had four shells for the gun. They tramped along and finally out popped Mr. Brum from a blackberry patch. Henry took careful aim at Mr. Bear, an aim that should have sent a bullet between the beast's eyes. "Bang!" went the gun, but Mr. Bear didn't stop. He kept edging closer to Henry.

"Bang!" went the second shell.

Bang!" went the third, and at last "B A N G!" went the very last.

Mr. Bear didn't even waver, but made straight for Henry. Henry, in turn made straight for home—as the crow flies.

He went right through the back window, casing sash and all, right into the arms of his father, as he groaned:

"Oh, father, Ah had sad news fo' you. Ah took fo shots at the bear, but he didn't fall. Some place in de woods back yonder, por Willyum am bein' picked clean to de bone by dat bear. Oh, poor Willyum, fo'gib me! fo' Ah sure done shoot to kill!"

LAST week I happened into the lunch room in the railroad station at Charing Cross, London, and was busily engaged in the task of getting outside of an order of eggs and coffee. A fellow sat beside me who was unmistakably an American, notwithstanding the fact that he looked much the worse for "fire water."

He swayed back and forth on his high stool with a display of balance that was amazing.

Just at this moment there tripped through the door a typical English dude—a "toff" for fair. He gavotted up to the lunch counter and said most graciously to the girl in waiting:

"I'd like to 'ave a cup o' tea and a bun."

Instantly my American friend whizzed around on his stool and yelled:

"Yer rummy! How in blazes can you get a bun with a cup of tea?"

THE ROMANCE OF LORD LEFTOVER

A Society Novel of New York Life

By William F. Kirk

CHAPTER VIII.

SHORTLY after the events recorded in the last chapter our hero found himself in a cute little apartment that was not unlike a squirrel cage save that it was not round and that it contained no wheel in which to exercise.

"Where am I?" he muttered, rubbing his eyes.

"Shut up," growled the warden.

"Did you address that remark to me?" demanded Lord Leftover. "How dare you speak that sort of bally rot to one of the first English families?"

The warden made no reply, and it was then that our hero realized, with an odd feeling of loneliness and despair, that he was in a gaol. Beating his hands against the bars like a frightened canary, he called again and again for the warden.

"Well?" came from the bearded lips of that gruff functionary. "Well?"

"What is this place I am detained in, my good fellow?" asked Lord Leftover, with what hauteur he could summon.

"You are in jail," was the succinct reply, rendered less succinct only because the warden was busy with some gum, or something.

"What?" shrieked Lord Leftover, "I am in G-A-O-L?"

"No, bo," replied the kindly warden, as he rapped one of our hero's fingers. "J-A-I-L."

"I say," persisted Lord Leftover, "that isn't any bloom ing way to spell gaol, you know. You haven't even got the first letter right. The first letter is 'G,' you know. 'G-A-O-L.'"

I said it was 'J-A-I-L,' snapped the warden, knocking off the tip of one of Lord Leftover's manicured nails. "Now, don't contradict me any more."

"What time do you wish to serve my breakfast?" inquired our hero, whose stomach was gnawing with the hunger that he could not fight off.

The grim warden smiled.

"I don't get many laughs around here, he said. "Would you mind repeating that, bo?"

"What time do you wish to serve my breakfast?" repeated Lord Leftover.

"Come out of that cell!" snapped the warden. "Come pronto and P. D. Q."

Lord Leftover obeyed with an alacrity that left no doubt as to his willingness to leave the coop in which he had been imprisoned.

"Rawther decent of you, old top!" he exclaimed, as he sought to grasp his keeper by the hand. "I shall enjoy getting out of this beastly mess, you know. It must all be some terrible mistake. What a jolly laugh the folks back home will have. I can hear their lawffer even now, making the rocks of old Albion shake."

"Are there lots of rocks there?" asked the warden.

Any amount of them," replied the unsuspecting Lord.

"That will be fine," exclaimed the warden. "Here is a nice twelve pound sledge. Try it and see how it weighs in your hands."

"It seems like a jolly well constructed tool," said Lord Leftover, as he poised the hammer with the utmost care. "To what purpose do you intend to put it, may I ask?"

Again the warden smiled grimly. He led our hero to the yard in the rear of the prison, where a pile of rocks loomed gray and dismal in the dawn.

"I will show you, Lord," he murmured, gently.

HOW TO CURE A COLD.

Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal-Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

THERE are exactly nine thousand and eleven ways to cure a cold. And each one of the nine thousand and eleven methods is the only absolutely sure cure. We have this from the very best authority; in fact, from nine thousand and eleven authorities.

We cannot hope to give each of these methods in detail here, but just now, having met Santa Claus coolly, with the coolness in our feet, colds are so prevalent we will give a few remedies that should not only be tried but convicted.

GRANDMOTHER'S WAY—Dear grandmother's remedies are so simple. Just soak the feet in mustard water, boiling hot, put salt pork sprinkled with red pepper around the neck, boiled onions on the chest, drink three quarts of catnip tea, take tincture of rhubarb, rochelle salts, lemon and honey and wormwood bitters. Then climb into bed and remain until the cold has become so discouraged it just sort of sags apart and drifts away.

GRANDFATHER'S WAY—Go out and saw a cord of wood in the yard just to get the lungs filled with fresh air. Then come in the house and eat a hearty meal of 'taters and fried pork. Somke mullen leaves to clear out the breathing tubes and drink a pint of hard cider, to which has been added a spoonful of pepper. Sit with the feet in the oven and read the almanac until bed time. Then go to bed and forget it.

FATHER'S WAY—For a female victim, "go let mother fix you up." For an adult male victim, purchase a bottle of one hundred 2-grain quinine pills. Take one decanter whiskey, one kettle hot water, one dozen lemons one bowl loaf sugar. In a water glass place two lumps of sugar, one slice lemon, squeeze in juice of one quarter lemon. Fill glass half full of whiskey. Stir until sugar is dissolved. Now add sufficient hot water to nearly fill glass. Sit in easy chair with papers and magazines handy, place another chair in front for resting feet upon, have favorite pipe and tobacco jar handy. Now break one of the 2-grain quinine pills into several fragments. Place tiny fragment of pill on tongue and wash it down with the hot whiskey. Repeat every fifteen minutes until you have forgotten entirely that you ever had a cold.

LITTLE SUSIE'S WAY—Sit up in bed with a nice new nightie on, all ruffled and beribboned. Have dollies handy. Also a box of sweets and some story books. Take whatever Mamma gives when she is looking, but throw it down back of the bed when her back is turned.

LITTLE WILLIE'S WAY.—"Jest keep sniffin' and go out an' play Injun or snowball fort or somepin'."

RASTUS JOHNSING'S WAY.—Take the left hind leg of a rabbit shot at midnight on the grave of a man hanged for murder, put this in a silk bag and wear it round the neck. This keeps that old bogey "Complications" from hanging around. Now get an owl that was shot on the top of a dead spruce tree in the full of the moon, take the seventh tail feather, counting from the left, and bring it home. Now a bottle of gin must be procured. Nothing else will do so well. Dip the owl feather in the gin and paint a circle around the neck to keep the cold from going down into the lungs. Now dip the feather in again and paint another circle right over the first one, to prevent the cold from going up into the throat and head. Now drink the gin that remains in the bottle and retire. That will put the boodoo on any cold.

THE DOCTOR'S WAY—The Doc comes in with a smile, because he intends to adopt a serious cast of countenance after he has examined the patient, and it wouldn't be as noticeable unless he started with the smile. When asked if it is a cold, he hesitates a bit and admits reluctantly that it could be classed as a cold. "You know there are many serious things like pneumonia that can be classed as colds," he says. Then he scowls at the little fever thermometer after taking the temperature, and carefully slips it into the case as though not caring to alarm any one. He generally drops some little remark about wishing he had been summoned earlier. He laughs scornfully at the suggestion of poultices and gargles and hot foot baths. Then he leaves some medicine. In one tumbler is a colorless fluid. In another it has a pinkish tinge. A few tiny pills are also left. With these the dear Doc ought to be able to keep the patient sufficiently worried and uncomfortable to allow him to get in say fifteen calls at $2.50 per. By that time the cold has worked itself off naturally, because Doc was careful that the gentle medicine he left was nothing that would hinder it. The patient has a good time telling his friends of his narrow escape from death by pneumonia, and thinks Doc is a wonder. What Doc thinks is his own business.

Tribes of North America--By Lewis Allen

BOOK VI.

THE GOLD HOARDERS.

THIS tribe is not of very great extent through North America for several reasons.

Some of these reasons are: (1) There's mighty few of us getting enough of the stuff to pay up with much less hoard it. (2) The few that do get much of it are, for the most part, too fond of hitting the high places. (3) Those who do get it insist on eating a slice of steak or a fresh egg now and then. (4) Marriage.

There are a lot of other reasons, which, boiled down, amount to the same as the above mentioned.

But there are gold hoarders in North America. Although rare, they may be found now and then. They are generally found going out just as it comes their turn to buy.

A well developed gold hoarder will put all his money in stocks, and bonds, and banks, and stockings, and such things. They raise a healthy family because rye bread and oatmeal is as healthy as it is cheap. If these edibles were not healthy, merely cheap, they would raise an unhealthy family.

Their wives stay home and mend clothes, and watch to see that too much butter is not used. Their sons go to college feeling like pikers because they have to wear out-of-date clothes, and don't have enough to pay fees in a frat. Their daughters go to high school and graduate in a made-over muslin. They live in one of those jig-saw houses that were quite stylish about forty-eight years ago, a house the gold-hoarder got by foreclosing on a widow, or that some maiden aunt left to the church and the gold hoarder got by breaking her will.

Women glare at him as he passes and say, "Isn't he a frump?" Young folks sneer and exclaim, "There goes the original tightwad." Little children laugh and say, "That man's a miser," and business men look at him and exclaim, "By thunder, I wish I had his wad. He's got the first dollar he ever saw, but there's nothing on it because he squeezed it so hard the eagle and the goddess died of strangulation. He must be worth a bunch of millions."

But the gold hoarder doesn't care. He's busy saving every penny, cutting down expenses, doubling his interest, foreclosing mortgages, flim-flamming every one, and chortling every time he tucks away another bunch of thousands.

No one knows how much he's worth as long as he lives. The only way to tell a gold-hoarder is to wait until he's dead, then you will know for certain, not only through the filing of his will, but by means of watching the family about three days and two hours after he's planted in a cheap but durable grave.

People of other tribes gasp in considerable amazement when they learn he left twenty-two millions and two or three square miles of real estate. They grin when they learn the bulk of it is left to found an institution for teaching the indigent the value of compound interest. Certain lawyers chuckle right out loud, and rub their hands in anticipation.

Then mother, if she had been fortunate enough to outlive him, and sons and daughters, club together and get the fanciest lawyers to be had and they smash that will into flinders and divide up the twenty-two million and sell the real estate and divide that.

After they get the money do they hoard it like father? Not for an instant. It is not hereditary. They make a splash that has Niagara Falls sounding like a dew-drop falling off a rose leaf.

They get up in a pink stone palace on Swedenborg avenue; the sons collect nineteen varieties of automobiles and bungalows and club memberships; the girls get round-shouldered wearing strings of diamonds and pearls; they buy opera boxes and yachts and Newport villas, and every time they come down the street they are so gorgeous one wonders where the footman is to announce their coming after the fashion of the advance guard of the circus parade who shouts, "Tie your horses, the elephants are coming!"

After they have reduced the twenty-two millions cash and the paltry sixteen millions from real estate into about twenty millions, they keep up the fight trying to spend the income and grieve because there is nothing expensive left for them to buy.

The gold hoarder never had any fun, but if one were to visit his grave about a year after his death they would hear a whirring sound just under the mound. It is the gold hoarder turning over and over in agony at the manner in which his family is making his gold fly.

A gold hoarder is not a pleasant man. His tribe is small and unpopular. The only times a gold hoarder is any use is after the Man on the Pale Horse takes him away and forces him to leave his gold behind. Then his coin gets into prompt and feverish circulation.

The Crooked Man—A Sherlock Holmes Mystery

By A Conan Doyle

(Copyright, 1894, by Harper & Brothers.)

ONE Summer night, a few months after my marriage, I was seated by my own hearth smoking a last pipe and nodding over a novel, for my day's work had been an exhausting one. My wife had already gone upstairs, and the sound of the locking of the hall door some time before I let me that the servants had also retired. I had risen from my seat and was knocking out the ashes of my pipe when I suddenly heard the clang of the bell.

I looked at the clock. It was a quarter to twelve. This could not be a visitor at so late an hour. A patient, evidently, and possibly an all-night sitting. With a wry face I went out into the hall and opened the door. To my astonishment it was Sherlock Holmes who stood upon the step.

"Ah, Watson," said he. "I hoped that I might not be too late to catch you."

My dear fellow, pray come in.

"You look surprised, and no wonder. Relieved, too, I fancy! Hum! I am still somewhat of the Arcadia mixture of your bachelor days then! There's no mistaking that fluff ash upon your coat. It's easy to tell that you have been accustomed to wear a uniform, Watson. You'll never pass as a pure-bred civilian as long as you keep that habit of carrying your handkerchief in your sleeve. Could you put me up to-night?"

"With pleasure."

"You told me that you had bachelor quarters for one, and I see that you have no gentleman visitor at present. Your hat-stand proclaims as much."

"I shall be delighted if you will stay."

Thank you. I'll fill the vacant peg then. Sorry to see that you've had the British workman in the house. He's a token of evil. Not the drains, I hope?"

"No, the gas."

Ah! He has left two nail-marks from his boot upon your linoleum just where the light strikes it. No, thank you, I had some supper at Waterloo, but I'll smoke a pipe with you with pleasure."

I handed him my pouch, and he seated himself opposite to me and smoked for some time in silence. I was well aware that nothing but business of importance would have brought him to me at such an hour, so I waited patiently until he should come round to it.

"I see that you are professionally rather busy just now," said he, glancing very keenly across at me.

"Yes, I had a busy day," I answered. "It may be a trifle, foolish in a case like this," I added, "but really I don't know how you deduced it."

Holmes chuckled to himself.

"I have the advantage of knowing your habits, my dear Watson," said he. "When your round is a short one you walk, and when it is a long one you use a hansom. As I perceive that your boots, although used, are by no means dirty, I cannot doubt that you are at present busy enough to justify the hansom."

"Excellent!" I cried.

"Elementary," said he. It is one of those instances where the reasoner can produce an effect which seems remarkable to his neighbor, because the latter has missed the one little point which is the basis of the deduction. The same may be said, my dear fellow, for the effect of some of these little sketches of yours, which is entirely meretricious, depending as it does upon your retaining in your own hands some facts in the problem which are never imparted to the reader. Now, at present I am in the position of these same readers, for I hold in this hand several threads of one of the strangest cases which ever perplexed a man's brain, and yet I lack the one or two which are needful to complete my theory. But I'll have them, Watson, I'll have them!" His eyes kindled and a shrill flush sprang into his thin cheeks. For an instant the veil had lifted upon his keen, intense nature. For an instant only. When I glanced again his face had resumed that red-Indian composure which had made so many regard him as a machine rather than a man.

"The problem presents features of interest," said he. "I may even say exceptional features of interest. I have already looked into the matter, and have come, as I think, within sight of my solution. If you could accompany me in that last step you might be of considerable service to me."

"I should be delighted."

"Could you go as far as Aldershot to-morrow?"

"I have no doubt Jackson would take my practice."

"Very good. I want to start by the 11:10 from Waterloo."

"That would give me time."

"Then, if you are not too sleepy, I will ask you a sketch of what has happened, and of the parts you have done."

"I was sleepy before you came. I am quite wakeful now."

"I will endeavor to put the case as briefly as possible, omitting anything vital to the case. It is probable that you may even have read some account of the affair. It is the supposed murder of Colonel Barclay, of the Royal Munsters at Aldershot which I am investigating."

"I have heard nothing of it."

"It has not excited much attention yet except locally. The facts are only two days old. Briefly they are these.

"The Royal Munsters is a regiment which can boast of more than one action with the natives in the British Empire. It did wonders both in the Crimea and the Mutiny, and has since that time distinguished itself upon every possible occasion. It was commanded up to Monday night by James Barclay, a gallant veteran, who started as a full private, was raised to commissioned rank for his bravery at the time of the Mutiny, and finally came to command the regiment in which he had once carried a musket.

"Colonel Barclay had married, at the time when he was a sergeant, and his wife, whose maiden name was Miss Nancy Devoy, was the daughter of a former color-sergeant in the same corps. There was therefore no great disparity in their social position when the young couple (for they were still young) found themselves in their new surroundings. They appear, however, to have quickly adapted themselves to their altered circumstances, for Barclay's record, as well as that of his wife, was always an understanding between the pair. On the whole, he thinks that Barclay's devotion to his wife was greater than his wife's to Barclay. He was accustomed on field days to see them riding together, the man's hand often touching the woman's, and his eyes resting upon her face. Mrs. Barclay was a frank, cheery, genial soul, very popular with the regiment, devoted and faithful, was less outspoken, affectionate than the more reserved officer. Superstition were the only unusual traits in his character which his brother officers had observed. The latter peculiarity took the form of a dislike to being left alone after dark. This fear verged upon a mania, which has become curiously manly had often given rise to comment and conjecture.

"The first battalion of the Royal Munsters (which is the old 117th) has been stationed at Aldershot for seven years. The married officers live out of barracks, and the Colonel has during all this time occupied a villa called Lachine, about half a mile from the north camp. The house stands in its own grounds, but the west side of it is not more than thirty yards from the high road. A considerable number of officers live on that road, and Major Murphy, their master and mistress, were the sole occupants of Lachine, for the Barclays had no children, nor was it usual for them to have resident visitors.

"Now for the events at Lachine between nine and ten on the evening of last Monday.

"Mrs. Barclay was, it appears, a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and had interested herself very much in the establishment of the Guild of St. George, which was formed in connection with the Watt Street Chapel for the purpose of supplying the poor with cast-off clothing. A meeting of the Guild had been held that evening at eight, and Mrs Barclay had hurried over her dinner in order to be present at it. When leaving the house she was heard by one of the servants to make some commonplace remark to her husband, and to assure him that she would be back before very long. She then called for Miss Morrison, a young lady who lives in the next villa, and the two went off together to their meeting. It lasted forty minutes, and at a quarter past nine Mrs. Barclay returned home, having left Miss Morrison at her door as she passed.

"There is a room which is used as a morning room at Lachine (this faces the road and opens in a large glass folding door on the lawn. The lawn is thirty yards across, and is only raised above it. It was into this room that Mrs. Barclay went upon her return. The blinds were not down, for the room was seldom used in the evening, but Mrs. Barclay herself lit the lamp and then rang the bell, asking Jane Stewart, the housemaid, to bring her a cup of tea, which was quite contrary to her usual habits. The Colonel had been sitting in the dining room, but hearing that his wife had returned he joined her in the [illegible]. The coachman saw him cross the hall and enter it. He was never seen again alive.

"The tea which had been ordered was brought up at the end of ten minutes, but the maid, as she approached the door, was surprised to hear the voices of husband and wife in furious altercation. She knocked without receiving any answer, and even turned the handle before she entered, but the door was locked upon the inside. Startled, she ran down to tell the cook, and the two women with the coachman came up into the hall and listened to the dispute which was still raging.

"They all agreed that only two words were to be heard, those in a voice of the man. Of these remarks were subdued and inarticulate, but the woman's were shrill and could be heard by the listeners. The latter's allegations were more bitter, and when she raised her voice [illegible] 'You coward!' she repeated over and over again. 'What can be done now? What can be done now? Give me back my boy. I will never so much as breathe the same air with you again! You coward!' These were a few of her observations, ending in a sudden dreadful cry of the man's voice, with a crash, and a piercing scream from the woman. Convinced that some tragedy had occurred, the coachman [illegible] the door and almost before it, while scream after scream [illegible] from within. He was unable, however, to make his way in, as the blinds were still drawn and the door locked. Instead of losing time in this way, he ran round to the back of the house and entered the room by the window without difficulty.

"As soon as he had done so the quarrel ceased, and he found Mrs. Barclay lying half-fainting upon the sofa, while her husband stood in front of the fireplace with a very startled face. He had just finished arranging the disordered room when the servants entered, and he then sent the coachman off for a doctor, who came in a few minutes and found that Colonel Barclay had been struck down by a severe injury at the back of the head. The weapon with which the blow had been given was found lying upon the floor. It was a short, stout club, with a large knob, and was one of a pair which had been used as ornaments in the hall. The fellow to it was found in the room. The doctor had eventually to be carried home in a state of insensibility. The Colonel's body was then placed upon the sofa, and a careful examination made of the scene of the tragedy.

"The injury from which the unfortunate veteran was suffering was found to be a jagged cut some two inches long at the back part of his head, which had evidently been caused by a violent blow from a blunt weapon. Nor was it difficult to guess what that weapon may have been. Upon the floor, close to the body, was lying a singular club of hard carved wood with a bone handle. The Colonel possessed a varied collection of weapons from all parts of the world, and his friends recognized this club as one of his favorites. It had been usually kept in the hall, but it was found that the servants had entered the room during the afternoon and had unpacked some new purchases from it. Thus the presence of the club in the room could be explained as well as that of the other.

"The police had at first very little to go upon, but the case was clear enough, and there was no reason to doubt that Mrs. Barclay had struck her husband down in a fit of ungovernable rage caused by some violent provocation. Up to this point there is no difficulty in reconstructing the course of events. The task of the police was then to find out how the provocation arose, and in what way Mrs. Barclay had become possessed of the formidable weapon which lay beside her husband. Mrs. Barclay herself had given a clear account of the proceedings at the Guild of St. George, and her statements were strongly corroborated by the other members of the committee. Miss Morrison, the friend who had walked home with her, had noticed nothing unusual either in her manner or conversation. Mrs. Barclay had shown no signs of undue excitement, and had remarked upon the fact that her husband had failed to put in an appearance at the meeting, which was very unlike his usual habit. Miss Morrison had left her friend at the door, and had actually caught a glimpse of the Colonel as he passed the window of the dining room, so that the latter was certainly visible at that time. Mrs. Barclay had then gone straight to the room in which she had found her husband, and had remained there until summoned by the servants.

"So much was fairly clear at the first inquiry. It was perfectly plain, however, that Mrs. Barclay's statements did not agree entirely with the facts as observed by the police. She declared that her husband was in the habit of going out every night before retiring to bed, and that he usually visited the stables at the end of the garden. On the night of the murder, however, he had not gone out, but had been sitting in the room. Then, again, the police could find no trace of any intruder having visited the house. Mrs. Barclay declared that a man had been concealed in the room, but that seems impossible, as the window was found to be fastened on the inside, and the only door was commanded by the open window. Then, again, Mrs. Barclay's account of the struggle was not consistent with the appearance of the room. Only one side of the window was open, which I understand was quite in accordance with your own habits when you are in a room, but there was a considerable draught in consequence. The chair of the Colonel was overturned, and there was evidence that he had been seated near the window. All these facts were very suggestive, and tended to show that the lady's account was not entirely to be depended upon, so I came to the conclusion that it was worth my while to run down and see the matter for myself. I got leave of absence, and reached Aldershot yesterday morning.

"That was the state of things, Watson, when upon the Tuesday morning I, at the request of Major Murphy, went down to Aldershot to supplement the efforts of the police. I think that you will acknowledge that the problem was already one of interest, but my observations soon made me realize that it was in truth much more extraordinary than would at first sight appear. Before examining the room I cross-questioned the servants, but only succeeded in eliciting the facts which I have already stated. One other detail of interest was remembered by Jane Stewart, the housemaid. You will remember that on hearing the sound of the quarrel she descended and returned with the other servants. On that first occasion, when she was alone, she says that the voices of her master and mistress were rank no low that she could hear hardly anything, and, judged by their tones rather than their words, that they had fallen out. On my pressing her, however, she remembered that she heard the word David uttered twice by the lady. The point is of the utmost importance as guiding us toward the reason of the sudden quarrel. The Colonel's name, you remember, was James.

"There was one thing in the case which had made the deepest impression both upon the servants and the police. This was the contortion of the Colonel's face. It had set, according to their account, into the most dreadful expression of fear and horror which a human countenance is capable of assuming. More than one person fainted at the mere sight of him, so terrible was the effect. It was quite certain that he had foreseen his fate, and that it had caused him the utmost horror. This, of course, fitted in well enough with the police theory, if the Colonel could have seen his wife making a murderous attack upon him. Nor was the fact of the wound being on the back of his head a fatal objection to this. He might have turned to avoid the blow. No information could be got from the lady herself, who was temporarily insane from an acute attack of brain fever.

"From the police I learned that Miss Morrison, who you remember went out that evening with Mrs. Barclay, denied having any knowledge of what it was which had caused the ill-humor in which her companion had returned.

"Having gathered these facts, Watson, I smoked several pipes over them, trying to separate those which were crucial from others which were merely incidental. There could be no question that the most distinctive and suggestive point in the case was the singular disappearance of the door key. A most careful search had failed to discover it in the room. Therefore it must have been taken from it. But neither the Colonel nor the Colonel's wife could have taken it. That was perfectly clear. Therefore a third person must have entered the room. And that third person could only have come in through the window.

"It seemed to me that a careful examination of the room and the lawn might possibly reveal some traces of this mysterious individual. You know my methods, Watson. There was not one of them which I did not apply to the inquiry, and it ended by my discovering traces, but very different ones from those which I had expected. There had been a man in the room, and he had crossed the lawn coming from the road. I was able to obtain five very clear impressions of his foot-marks—one in the roadway itself, at the point where he had climbed the low wall; two on the lawn, and two more upon the narrow strip of wood boards near the window where he had entered. He had apparently run across the lawn, for his toe-marks were much deeper than his heels. But it was not the man who surprised me. It was his companion.

"His companion?"

Holmes pulled a large sheet of tissue paper out of his pocket and carefully unfolded it upon his knee.

"What do you make of that?" he asked.

The paper was covered with tracings of the foot-marks of some small animal. It had five small marked footpads an inch in front of the others, and a long straggling mark behind, as if a very large rat had been dragged along the ground.

"I did, sir, and at the sight of me he looked as I have never seen a man look before."

"It's a dog," said I.

"Did you ever hear of a dog running up a curtain? I found distinct traces that this creature had done so."

"A monkey, then."

"But it is not the print of a monkey."

"What can it be, then?"

"Neither dog nor cat nor monkey nor any creature that we are familiar with. I have tried to reconstruct it from the measurements. Here are four prints where the beast has been standing motionless. You see that it is no less than fifteen inches from fore-foot to hind. Add to that the length of neck and head, and you get a creature not much less than two feet long—probably more if there is any tail. But now observe this other measurement. The animal has been moving, and we have the length of its stride in each case it is only about three inches. You have an indication you see of a long body with very short legs attached to it. It has not been considerate enough to leave any of its hair behind it. But its general shape must be what I have indicated, and it can run up a curtain, and it is carnivorous."

"How do you deduce that?"

"Because it ran up the curtain. A canary's cage was hanging in the window, and its aim seems to have been to get at the bird."

"Then what was the beast?"

"Ah, if I could tell you it at once it might go a long way toward solving the case. On the whole it was probably some creature of the weasel and stoat tribe—and yet it is larger than any of these that I have seen."

"But you had it to do with the crime?"

"That, also, is still obscure. But we have learned a good deal, you perceive. We know that a man stood in the road looking at the quarrel between the Barclays—the blinds were up and the room lighted. We know, also, that he ran across the lawn, entered the room, accompanied by a strange animal, and that he either struck the Colonel, or, as is equally possible, that the Colonel fell down from sheer fright at the sight of him, and cut his head on the corner of the fender. Finally, we have the curious fact that the intruder carried away the club with him when he left."

"Your observations seem to have left the business more obscure than it was before," said I.

"You are right to say so. They undoubtedly showed that the affair was much deeper than was at first conjectured. I thought the matter over, and I came to the conclusion that I must approach the case from another aspect. But really, Watson, I am keeping you late, and I might just as well tell you all this on our way to Aldershot tomorrow."

"Thank you, you have gone rather too far to stop."

"It is quite certain that when Mrs. Barclay left the house at half-past nine she was on good terms with her husband. The latter was never, as I think I have said, ostentatiously affected, but she was heard by the coachman chatting with the Colonel in a friendly fashion. Now, it is absolutely certain that, immediately on her return, she had gone to the room in which she was least likely to see her husband, had flown to tea, as an agitated woman will, and finally, on his coming in to her, had broken into violent recriminations. Therefore something had occurred between seven-thirty and nine o'clock which had completely altered her feelings toward him. But Miss Morrison had been with her during the whole of that hour and a half. It was absolutely certain, therefore, in spite of her denial, that she must know something of the matter.

"My first conjecture was, that possibly there had been some passages between this young lady and the old soldier, which the former had not confessed to the wife. That would account for the angry return, and also for the girl's denial that anything had occurred. Nor would it be entirely incompatible with most of the words overheard. But there was the reference to David, and there was the known affection of the Colonel for his wife, to weigh against it, to say nothing of the tragic intrusion of this other man, which might, of course, be entirely disconnected with what had gone before.

"It was not easy to pick one's steps, but, on the whole, I was inclined to dismiss the idea that there had been anything between the Colonel and Miss Morrison, but more than ever convinced that the young lady held the clew as to what it was which had turned Mrs. Barclay to hatred of her husband. I took the obvious course, therefore, of calling upon Miss M., of explaining to her that I was perfectly certain that she held the facts in her possession, and of assuring her that her friend, Mrs. Barclay, might find herself in the dock upon a capital charge unless the matter were cleared up.

"Miss Morrison is a little ethereal slip of a girl, with timid eyes and blond hair, but I found her by no means wanting in shrewdness and common sense. She sat thinking for some time after I had spoken, and then, turning to me with a brisk air of resolution, she broke into a remarkable statement which I will condense for your benefit.

"I promised my friend that I would say nothing of the matter, and a promise is a promise, said she, but if I can really help you to hush up this terrible scandal I shall consider that my self-control is justified by illness, then I think I am absolved from my promise. I will tell you exactly what happened upon Monday evening.

"We were returning from the Watt Street Mission about a quarter to nine o'clock, and on our way we had to pass through Hudson street, which is a very quiet thoroughfare. There is only one lamp in it, upon the left-hand side, and as we approached this lamp I saw a man coming toward us with his head very bent, and something like a box slung over one of his shoulders. He appeared to be deformed for he walked with his head low and walked with his knees bent. We were passing him when he raised his face to look at us in the circle of light thrown by the lamp, and as he did so he stopped and screamed out in a dreadful voice, 'My God, it's Nancy!' Mrs. Barclay turned as white as death, and would have fallen down had the dreadful-looking creature not caught hold of her. I was going to call for the police but she to my surprise, spoke quite calmly to the fellow.

"So I have," said he, and it was awful to hear the tones that he said it in. He had a very dark, fierce face and a gleam in his eyes that comes back to me in my dreams. His hair and whiskers were shot with gray, and his face was all crinkled and puckered like a withered apple.

"Just walk on a little way dear," said Mrs. Barclay; 'I want to have a word with the man. There is nothing to be afraid of.' She tried to speak bold, but she was still deadly pale and could hardly get her words out for the trembling of her lips.

"I did as she asked me, and they talked together for a few minutes. Then she came down the street with her eyes blazing, and I saw the crippled wretch standing by the lamp-post and striking his clenched fists in the air as if he were mad with rage. She never said a word until we were at the door here, when she took me by the hand and begged me to tell no one what had happened.

"It is an old acquaintance of mine who has come down in the world," said she. When I promised her I would say nothing she kissed me and I have never seen her since. I have told you now the whole truth, and if I withheld it from the police it is because I did not realize then the danger in which my dear friend stood. I know that it can only be to her advantage that everything should be known.

"There was her statement. Watson, as to me, as you can imagine, it was like a light on a dark night. Everything which had been dim before began at once to assume its true place, and I had a shadowy presentiment of the whole sequence of events. My next step obviously was to find the man who had produced such a remarkable impression upon Mrs. Barclay. If he were still in Aldershot it should not be a very difficult matter. There are not such a very great number of civilians, and a deformed man was sure to have attracted attention. I spent a day in the search, and by evening—this very evening, Watson—I had run him down.

"The man's name is Henry Wood and he lives in lodgings in this same street in which the ladies met him. He has only been six days in the place. In the character of a registration agent I had a most interesting gossip with his landlady. The man is by trade a conjurer and performer, going round the canteens after dinner and playing tricks, which, from what I hear, are very much in the style of the regular programme. He carries some creature about with him in that box, which the landlady seemed to be in considerable trepidation, for she had never seen an animal like it. He uses it in some of his tricks, according to her account. So much the woman was able to tell me, and also that it was a source of terror to her husband, seeing how it hated him and that he spoke in a strange tongue sometimes and that for the last two nights she had heard him groaning and weeping in his bedroom. He was all right, as far as money went, but in his deposits he had given her what looked like a bad florin. She showed it to me. Watson, and it was an Indian rupee.

"So now, my dear Watson, you see exactly how we stand and why it is I want you. It is perfectly plain that after the ladies parted from this man he followed them at a distance, that he saw the quarrel between husband and wife through the window, that he rushed in, and that the creature which he had with him got loose. That is all very certain. But he is the only person in this world who can tell us exactly what happened in that room."

And you intend to ask him?"

"Most certainly, but in the presence of a witness."

And I am the witness?"

"If you will be so good. If he can clear the matter up, well and good. If he refuses, we have no alternative but to apply for a warrant."

But how do you know he'll be there when we return?"

You may be sure that I took some precautions. I have one of my Baker street lads mounting guard over him, and he will stick to him like a burr, go where he might. We shall find him in Hudson street to-morrow, Watson, and meanwhile I should be the criminal myself if I were to let you out of bed."

It was midday when we found ourselves at the scene of the tragedy, and, under my companion's guidance, we made our way at once to Hudson street. In spite of his grim errand Holmes rallied his emotions. I could easily see that Holmes was in a state of suppressed excitement, and I was aware from experience that his high-spirited, half-intellectual pleasure which I invariably experienced when I associated myself with him in his investigations.

"This is the street," said he when we had passed a short, prosperous half-way, with plain two-storied brick houses. Ah, here is Simpson to report.

"Well, Simpson!" said Mr. Holmes," cried a small street Arab, running to meet us.

"Good, Simpson!" said Holmes, patting him on the head. "Come along, Watson. This is the house." He sent in his card with a message that he had come on important business, and a moment later we were face to face with the man whom we had come to see. In spite of the warm weather he was crouching over a fire, and the little room was like an oven. The man sat all shriveled and huddled in his chair in a way which gave an indescribable impression of deformity; but the face which he turned toward us, though worn and wasted, must have been remarkable for its beauty. He looked suspiciously at us now out of yellow-shot, bilious eyes, and, without speaking or rising, he waved toward two chairs.

"Mr. Henry Wood late of India, I believe," said Holmes, affably. "I've come over this little matter of Colonel Barclay's death."

What should I know about that?"

"That's what I want to find out. You know, I suppose, that unless the matter is cleared up, Mrs. Barclay, who is an old friend of yours, will in all probability be tried for murder."

The man gave a violent start.

"I don't know who you are," he cried, "nor how you come to know what you do know, but will you swear that this is true that you tell me?"

Why, they are only waiting for her to come to her senses to arrest her."

"My God! Are you in the police yourself?"

"No."

What business is it of yours then?"

"It's every man's business to see justice done."

"You can take my word that she is innocent."

"Then you are guilty."

"No I am not."

Who killed Colonel James Barclay, then?"

"It was a just providence that killed him. But, mind you, if that if I had known his brute of a character as it was in my heart to do, he would have had no more than his due from my hands. I take own guilty conscience had not struck him down it is likely enough that I might have had his blood upon my soul. You want me to tell the story. Well, I don't know why I shouldn't, for there's no cause for me to be ashamed of it.

"It was in this way, sir. You see me now with my back like a camel and my ribs all awry, but there was a time when Corporal Henry Wood was the smartest man in the 117th foot. We were in India then, in cantonments, at a place we'll call Burree Barclay, who died the other day, was sergeant in the same company as myself, and the belle of the regiment, ay, and the finest girl that ever

"The Prince and The Plutocrat," or, "The Great Babylon Hotel."

BY ARNOLD BENNETT.

The Millionaire and the Waiter.

"Yes, sir?"

Jules, the celebrated head waiter of the Grand Babylon, was bending formally toward the alert, middle-aged man who had just entered the smoking room.

It was 7:45 on a particularly sultry June night, and dinner was about to be served at the Grand Babylon.

Men of all sizes, ages and nationalities, but everyone alike arm[illegible] in full-dress evening dress, were dotted about the [illegible] d[illegible] a faint odor of flowers and the tinkle of a fountain came [illegible] conversation.

The waiter, commanded by Jules, moved softly across the thick Oriental rugs balancing their trays with the dexterity of a juggler, and receiving and executing orders with that air of profound importance of which only really first-class waiters have the secret.

The atmosphere was an atmosphere of serenity and repose, characteristic of the Grand Babylon. It seemed impossible that anything could occur to mar the peaceful, aristocratic monotony of existence, in that perfectly managed establishment.

Yet on that night was to happen the mightiest upheaval that the Grand Babylon had ever known.

"Yes, sir?" repeated Jules, and this time there was a shade of august disapproval in his voice, it was not usual for him to have to address a customer twice.

Oh!" said the alert, middle-aged man, looking up at length. Beautifully tanned out of the lassitude of the great Jules, he allowed his gray eyes to twinkle as he caught sight of the expression on the waiter's face.

Bring me an angel kiss.

"Pardon, sir.

Bring me an angel kiss, and be good enough to lose no time.

If it's an American drink, I fear we don't keep it, sir."

The voice of Jules fell feebly distinct, and several men glanced round uneasily, as if to deprecate the slightest disturbance of their calm.

The appearance of the person to whom Jules was speaking, however, reassured them somewhat, for in the hall the look of that expert, he traveled Englishman, who can differentiate between one hotel and another by instinct and who knows at once where he may make a fuss with propriety, and where it is advisable to behave exactly as at a club.

The Grand Babylon was a hotel in whose smoking room one behaved as in one was at one's club.

I didn't suppose you did, but you can mix it, I guess, even in a hotel.

This isn't an American hotel, sir.

The calculated lowering of the words was cleverly masked beneath an accent of humble submission.

The alert, middle-aged man sat up straight and gazed placidly at Jules, who was pulling his famous red side-whiskers

Get a liquor glass," he said, half curtly and half with good-humored tolerance, "pour into it equal quantities of maraschino, cream and crème de menthe. Don't stir it; don't shake it. Bring it to me. And, I say, tell the bartender—

Bartender, sir!"

Tell the bartender to make a note of the recipe, as I shall probably want an angel kiss every evening before dinner so long as I am under this roof."

"I will send the drink to you, sir," said Jules distantly.

That was his parting shot, by which he indicated that he was not as other waiters are, and that any person who treated him with disrespect did so at his own peril.

A few minutes later, while the alert, middle-aged man was testing the angel kiss, Jules sat in conclave with Miss Spencer who had charge of the office of the Grand Babylon.

This office was a fairly large chamber, with two sliding glass partitions which overlooked the entrance hall and the smoking room.

Only a small portion of the clerical work of the great hotel was performed there. The place served chiefly as the lair of Miss Spencer, who was as well known and as important as Jules himself.

Her age, none knew it, save herself, and perhaps one other, and none cared. The gracious and alluring contours of her figure were irreproachable, and in the evenings she was a useful ornament which any hotel might be innocently proud of.

Her knowledge of Bradshaw of steamship services and the programmes of all theaters and music halls was unrivalled; yet she never travelled, she never went to a theatre or music hall.

She seemed to spend the whole of her time in that official lair of hers, imparting information to guests, or phoning to the various departments, or engaged in intimate conversation with her special friends on the staff—as at present.

Who's No. 107?" Jules inquired

Miss Spencer examined her ledger

Mr Theodore Racksole, New York

I thought I remembered a New Yorker," said Jules after a brief attempt to [illegible] a good English accent. He was a wide-awake angel kiss, marschino and cream, if you please, very much.

Miss Spencer smiled grimly in response. The notion of [illegible] Racksole must be the tongue and only Theodore Racksole the third richest man in the United States, and, therefore, the world.

Nevertheless, she hurried herself at once at the side of Jules [illegible] as there was only one Jules and Miss Spencer instinctively shared the latter's [illegible] on the spectacle of any person whatever, millionaire or [illegible], presuming to demand an "angel kiss," that unrespectable concoction of mismashing and creaming, within the precincts of the Grand Babylon.

In the world of hotels it was currently stated that, next to the proprietor, there were three gods at the Grand Babylon—Jules the head waiter; Miss Spencer, and, most powerful of all, Monsieur Rocco, the chef, who earned two thousand a year and had a chalet on the Lake of Lucerne.

All the great hotels in Northumberland Avenue and on the Thames Embankment had striven to get Rocco away from the Grand Babylon, but without success.

Rocco was well aware that even he could rise no higher than to be maître d'hôtel of the Grand Babylon, which, though it never advertised itself, and didn't belong to a limited company, stood on the pinnacle of the hotels of Europe—first in exclusiveness, first in exclusiveness, first in that mysterious quality known as "style."

The Grand Babylon counted that day wasted on which it did not number at least [illegible] German prince or the maharajah of some Indian State.

When Felix Babylon—after whom, and not with any reference to London's nickname, the hotel was christened—when Felix Babylon founded the hotel in 1868, he had set himself to cater for royalty, and that was the secret of his triumphant eminence.

The son of a rich Swiss hotel proprietor and financier, he had contrived to establish a connection with the officials of several European courts, and he had not spared money in that respect.

It was not good form to mention prices at the Grand Babylon the prices were enormous, but you never spoke of them. At the conclusion of your stay a bill was presented, brief and void of details, and you paid it without a word

If there was one thing more than another that amazed the world Babylon—put its back up, so to speak—it was to be compared with or to be mistaken for an American hotel.

The Grand Babylon was resolutely opposed to American methods of eating, drinking and lodging—but especially American methods of drinking.

The resentment of Jules on being requested to supply Mr Theodore Racksole with an angel kiss will therefore be appreciated.

"Anybody with Mr. Theodore Racksole?" asked Jules, continuing his conversation with Miss Spencer.

"Miss Racksole—she's in No. 111."

"She's where?" he queried, with a peculiar emphasis.

"No. 111. I couldn't help it. There was no other room with a bathroom and dressing room on that floor."

Miss Spencer's voice had an appealing tone of excuse.

Why didn't you tell Mr. Theodore Racksole and Miss Racksole that we were unable to accommodate them?"

I knew I did was in hearing."

Only two people in the wide world ever dreamed of applying to Mr. Felix Babylon the playful but mean abbreviation, Rose. The [illegible] were Jules, Miss Spencer and Rocco.

Didn't [illegible] entered it; no one but he would have had either the [illegible] audacity to do so.

And after [illegible] that Miss Racksole changes her room [illegible] said, after another pause. "Leave it to me. [illegible] It's three minutes to 8. I shall take charge of [illegible] myself to-night."

At [illegible] splendidly dinner was served in the immense salle-[illegible] splendid apartment of white and gold [illegible] one of the windows a young lady sat about [illegible] and Paris, but her face unmistakably said New York.

It was a self-possessed and bewitching face—the face of a woman thoroughly accustomed to doing exactly what she liked, when she liked, how she liked—the face of a woman who had taught hundreds of gilded young men the true art of fetching and carrying, and also by twenty years or so of parental spoiling had come to regard herself as the feminine equivalent of the Czar of all the Russias.

Such women are made only in America, and they come to their full bloom only in Europe, which they imagine to be a continent erected by Providence for their diversion

The young lady [illegible] window glanced disapprovingly at the menu card. Then she looked around the dining room and, while admiring the diners, decided that the room itself was rather small and plain.

Then she gazed through the open window and told herself that though the Thames, by daylight, was passable enough, it was by no means level with the Hudson, on whose shores her father had a $100,000 country cottage.

Then she returned to the menu and with a pursing of lovely lips said that there appeared to be nothing to eat

Sorry to keep you waiting, Nella."

It was Mr. Racksole, the intrepid millionaire, who had dared to order an angel kiss in the smoke-room of the Grand Babylon

Nella—her proper name was Helen—smiled at him cautiously, reserving to herself the right to scold if she should feel so inclined

You are always late, father," she said

Only on a holiday," he said What is there to eat?"

Nothing."

There let's have it. I'm hungry. I'm never so hungry as when I'm being seriously idle."

Consommé Britannia," she began to read out from the menu Salmon d'Essex, Sauce Genoise, Asples de homard. Oh, Heavens! Who wants those horrid messes on a night like this?"

But, Nella, this is the best cooking in Europe," he protested.

Say, father," she said, with alarming irrelevance, "had you forgotten it's my birthday to-morrow?"

Have I ever forgotten your birthday, oh! most costly daughter

On the whole, it's been a most satisfactory day," she answered sweetly, "and to reward you I'll be content this year with the cheapest birthday treat you ever gave me. Only I'll have to do it to-night."

Well?" he said, with the long suffering patience, the readiness for [illegible] surprise of a parent whom Nella had thoroughly trained. What is it?"

It's this—let's have a filleted steak and a bottle of Bass for dinner to-night. It will be simply exquisite. I shall love it

But, my dear Nella," he exclaimed, steak and beer at Felix's! It's impossible. Moreover, you [illegible] twenty three cannot be permitted to drink Bass.

I [illegible] steak and Bass, and as for being twenty-three, I shall be twenty-four to-morrow.

Miss Racksole set her small white teeth

There was a gentle conch. Jules stood over them

It is at have been out of a pure spirit of adventure that he had selected this table for his own services. Usually Jules did not personally wait at dinner

His merely hovered [illegible], like a captain on the bridge, during the [illegible] watch. Regular frequenters of the hotel felt themselves honored when Jules attached himself to their tables

Theodore Racksole hesitated one second, and then issued the order with a fine air of carelessness: "Filleted steak for two and a bottle of Bass."

It was the bravest act of Theodore Racksole's life, and yet at more than one previous crisis a high courage had not been lacking to him

It's not in the menu sir," said Jules the imperturbable Never mind. Get it if we want it

"Very good, sir"

Jules walked to the service door, and, merely affecting to look behind, came immediately back again

"Mr. Rocco's compliments, sir, and he regrets to be unable to serve steak and Bass to-night, sir."

"Mr. Rocco?" questioned Racksole lightly

"Mr. Rocco," replied Jules with firmness

"And who is Mr Rocco?"

"Mr. Rocco is our chef, sir.

Jules had the expression of a man who is asked to explain who Shakespeare was

The two men looked at each other It seemed incredible that Theodore Racksole, the ineffable Racksole, who owned a thousand miles of railway, several towns and sixty votes in Congress, should be denied by a waiter, or even by a whole hotel.

Yes it was. When Europe's efete back is against the wall, not a regiment of millionaires can turn the flank

Jules had the calm expression of a strong man, sure of victory His face said. "You beat me once, but not this time, my New York friend."

As for Nella, knowing her father, she foresaw interesting events and waited confidently for the issue

She did not feel hungry, and she could afford to wait

"Excuse me a moment, Nella," said Theodore Racksole quietly, "I shall be back in about two seconds," and he strode out of the salle-a-manger

No one in the room recognized the millionaire, for he was unknown to London, this being his first visit to Europe for over twenty years. Had any one done so, and caught the expression on his face, that man might have trembled for an explosion which would have blown the entire Grand Babylon into the Thames

Jules stared straightforwardly to a corner

He had fired; it was the antagonist's turn

A long and varied experience had taught Jules that a guest who [illegible] on the published menu is [illegible] almost always lost. The waiter has so many advantages in such a contest

Nevertheless, there are men with a confirmed habit of getting their own way, even as guests in an authoritative hotel. Theodore Racksole had long since fallen into that useful practice—except when his only daughter, Helen, was motherless, but high-spirited girl chose to think that his way crossed hers; in which case Theodore capitulated and fell back

But when Theodore and his daughter happened to be going one and the same road, which was pretty often, then Heaven alone might help any obstacle that was so ill-advised as to stand in their path.

Jules, great and observant man though he was, had not noticed the terrible projecting thing of both father and daughter; otherwise it is possible he would have reconsidered the question of the steak and bass.

Theodore Racksole went direct to the entrance hall of the hotel and entered Miss Spencer's sanctum.

"I want to see Mr. Babylon," he said, "without the delay of an instant."

Miss Spencer leisurely raised her flaxen head

"I am afraid"—she began the usual formula.

It was part of her daily duty to discourage guests who desired to see Mr. Babylon.

"No, no," said Racksole quickly. "I don't want any 'I'm afraid is.' This is business. If you had been the ordinary hotel clerk, I should have slipped a couple of sovereigns into your hand and the thing would have been done. As you are not, as you are obviously above bribes, I merely say to you—I must see Mr. Babylon at once on an affair of the utmost urgency. My name is Racksole—Theodore Racksole."

"Of New York?" questioned a voice at the door, with a slight foreign accent.

The millionaire turned shortly and saw a rather short, French looking man, with a bald head, a gray beard, a long and perfectly built frock coat, eyeglasses attached to a minute silver chain and blue eyes that seemed to have the transparent innocency of a maid's.

"Mr. Rocco's compliments, sir, and he regrets to be unable to serve steak and ale tonight, sir."

(Racksole the American millionaire, defied by the head waiter and chef as described in to-day's opening install ment.)

"There's only one," said Theodore Racksole succinctly

I wish to see me" the newcomer suggested

You are Mr. Felix Babylon

I know," [illegible]

"At the moment I wish to see you more than any one else in the world," said Racksole; "I am consumed and burnt up with a desire to see you, Mr. Babylon. I only want a few minutes' quiet chat. I fancy I can settle my business in that time."

With a gesture Mr. Babylon invited the millionaire down a side corridor, at the end of which was Mr. Babylon's private room, a miracle of Louis XV. furniture and tapestry; like most unmarried men with large incomes, Mr. Babylon had "tastes" of a highly expensive sort.

The landlord and his guest sat down opposite each other

Theodore Racksole had met with the usual millionaire's luck in his adventure; for Mr. Babylon made a practice of not allowing himself to be interviewed by his guests, however distinguished, however wealthy, however pertinacious.

If he had not chanced to enter Miss Spencer's office at that precise moment, and if he had not been impressed in a somewhat peculiar way by the physiognomy of the millionaire, not all Mr Racksole's American energy and ingenuity would have availed for a confabulation with the owner of the Grand Babylon Hotel that night.

Theodore Racksole, however, was ignorant that a mere accident had served him. He took all the credit to himself

THE invasion of the drama by the comic supplement may have a saddening effect upon the few addle-pated persons who take a purely academic interest in the stage and its belongings, but it has brought a most happy state of affairs for those who engage in the profession for vulgar profit. At any rate that has been the case this season, and the newspaper "comic" has come in for a good deal of free advertising. The popularity of Mutt and Jeff has never been questioned, but it was hardly expected that the dramatization of the two characters would prove the theatrical sensation of the year. The performance of Mutt and Jeff" at the Globe Theatre, after an engagement of twelve weeks was in the nature of a generous tribute to the cleverness of Bud FISHER. It was a pity that Mr. Fisher could not have left well enough alone, for his efforts to give his production a more dignified appearance by introducing a few entertaining qualities that were entirely foreign to the piece as it was originally conceived, however, only served to make the performance of Gus, who in the book of the show is the only character that retains the spirit of the original comic strip, all the more conspicuous by contrast. Although the company for the $2 house is the same that played the piece at the Globe, the cast has been somewhat changed, and New York will have the novelty of paying $2 for a show that was there earlier in the season for the $1 scale of prices. This is probably the first time in recent years that a popular priced attraction has engaged in such a move after a week's try out. And Mutt and Jeff are not the only members of the Boston AMERICAN'S happy family who have proved a hit on the stage. Over at the Fremont Theatre the Dingbats are receiving much support to Mr. Ziegfeld "Follies" by serving as one of the big features of the show. Mr. Ziegfeld had to go to the AMERICAN for help before. Two years ago the Brinkley Girls supplied the most attractive number in the "Follies" of that season. Other popular newspaper "comics" that have recently gone to the rescue of the drama are the Dingbats and Desperate Desmond. There appears to be something of a wholesale raid upon the comic supplement.

WHEN Lew Fields first began to make independent musical comedy productions his plan of action depended solely upon his belief that the public would give healthy support to big productions, so he set about to outdo anything that had ever been attempted up to that time. He made a common promise to set a new standard for musical comedy and he has kept his promise. He gives fresh evidence of adding to the task this season in "The Never Homes," now playing at the Shubert Theatre. An evening with "The Never Homes" makes you wonder how Mr. Fields expects to extract any profit from his organization, no matter how steady the demand may be for seats. It is not only giving the public more than its money's worth in some respects, for the piece is so lavishly produced that nearly requires two visits to grasp its numerous details, but he may be doing the public a great service by employing high salaried players for unimportant roles—it is very nice of him to do it—but what can it avail him beyond adding to his reputation, if the week's receipts are eaten up by a hungry, over-developed payroll? The public can stand it, of course, but how can Mr. Fields stand it and continue to send money home for household expenses?

ONE of the most attractive bits of character acting that Boston has seen for many months is found in "The Country Boy," in which Edward N. Wright is responsible for it. Mr. Wright plays a philosophical newspaper man—a man who has lost his grip on things and is slipping into the has-been class. It is this character that supplies "The Country Boy" with a touch that is more nearly human than any other in the play. You may laugh and enjoy the familiar types that inhabit Mrs. Bannan's lodging house—you even laugh at Merkle, the character played by Mr. Wright—but the newspaper man puts you in a thinking mood with his cynical observations. Mr. Wright gives you a glimpse of the bitterness of life as some men find it—men who struggle and fail, and who still keep on struggling with no hope that the future will bring anything but fresh failures. As played by Mr. Wright the character arouses emotions that are seldom felt in the theatre, and your memory clings to it long after the play is ended.

IN the old days we called them "living pictures" and no well regulated, carefully groomed burlesque show was without them. Since burlesque has enjoyed a period of reform and uplift, the alluring "living pictures" of the past have become "art studies," which means the same thing, only it looks better in type. This brings us to Mlle. Follette, who will be the central figure in a series of art studies at the Gaiety Theatre this week with the Broadway Burlesquers. Inasmuch as Mlle. Follette claims to be the handsomest woman in burlesque, and as no one has come forward to dispute her right to the title, it may be inferred that the art studies will contribute a generous share to the week's entertainment at the Gaiety.

ONCE more the Globe Theatre deserts the regular drama for vaudeville. The new policy, or rather the return to a former policy, will become operative to-morrow, when the doors will open at 10 o'clock and remain that way until 10:45 in the evening. The success of the Globe Theatre as a vaudeville house during the last two Summers developed a strong sentiment favoring a continuation of that style of program throughout the entire season, but the plan was abandoned when September arrived. There was every reason to believe, however, that by the first of the new year the house would return to the varieties. The opening program under the new policy indicates that high class features will be the rule.

IN another week the spell of comedy at the local theatres will be broken by the arrival of "The Boss" at the Majestic. In this play by Edward Sheldon, we make a partial return to the political drama that enjoyed a popular vogue a few years ago. It is a typical American play and shows the rough side of modern politics at its best—or worst. Mr. Sheldon has denied that he drew his central figure from a well-known politician of the "boss" type who lives in Buffalo, but it is known that the author spent several months in Buffalo collecting material for the play. Of course, you don't have to take Mr. Sheldon's denial too seriously.

BLANCHE RING and her manager husband have been sorely and artistically bruised because "The Yankee Girl" was unexpectedly announced to appear in St. Louis at reduced prices. Miss Ring wants it known that she is a $2 star of the first quality and that no $1 house shall ever hear her silvery voice. Art is art, of course, but Miss Ring declares that her kind is worth $2 and she is going to get it or send her show back to the storehouse. The situation in St. Louis is more or less amusing, even at the cost of much annoyance to Miss Ring. When her manager-husband, Frederic McKay, discovered that his pretty wife was booked to play at one of Shubert theatres at a dollar scale he wrote, telegraphed and voiced emphatic disapproval, which, it appears, had no agreeable affect upon the Shubert management. He, thereupon, booked "The Yankee Girl" at one of the syndicate theatres in St. Louis and began an energetic advertising campaign to acquaint the public with his shift of base. The Shuberts kept right on advertising Miss Ring as a coming attraction at their house. The syndicate also claims her. It is safe to assume that Miss Ring will play somewhere in St. Louis to-morrow.

All Washington society has taken to skates these days, and all the fashionable functions are sandwiched in between the ice frolics of all the skaters on the Potomac. In fact I am admiring attention has been diverted from Miss Alice Meyer and her sister Julia, daughters of Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. George von L. Meyer and his pretty young sister, Miss Lucy Meyer, to the plain, straight kind of skating they do, but all the fancy steps known to the most expert are numbered among their accomplishments, and while they perform, others forget their skating and stand aside to watch.

Miss Meyer and her sister Julia are considered two of the most attractive girls in Washington and Boston society. Lucy Meyer is now spending at the capital and is a summer visitor at North Shore. They are as like as the proverbial "two peas," and their costumes, hats, gloves and shoes are always duplicates, as they dress alike to the minutest detail. They are very popular at the capital, and no smart gathering is complete without them.

GIGANTIC SOCIAL PLAN OF VANDERBILT

Alfred G. Will Again Be a Leader in London if Money Can Do it.

HIS BRIDE THE INCENTIVE

To Have Splendid London House, a Chalet at Moritz and a Castle in Scotland.

By CHESTER OVERTON.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt will again attempt to become a regular "society man" in London. His previous attempt was several years ago. Then he seemed on the pinnacle of success, when suddenly came his first wife's divorce suit, swiftly followed by the death of Mme. Rita, who was said to have committed suicide because he no longer loved her. All that meant that so far as the most exclusive folk in London were concerned, Alfred went tumbling into an abyss from which he has never entirely clambered.

It has not seemed to worry him, for a person with so much money is bound to shine in some sort of society, so he has methodically devoted himself to the Olympia Horse Show and coaching on the Brighton road, as if those were the Alpha and Omega of earthly glories. But the new Mrs. Vanderbilt, formerly Mrs. Margaret Emerson McKim, is said to have caused a recrudescence of her husband's social ambition, and while Alfred will remain on the Brighton coach, which has become a sort of Summer institution, stables and kennels will henceforth play a more minor part in the Vanderbilt menage.

Permanent London Home.

Alfred intends to establish a splendid permanent home in London, giving up his flat in Gloucester House, overlooking Piccadilly, which has been the scene of many of his Bohemian entertainments. Since their wedding the pair have passed a quiet honeymoon at the Stream Cottage, near Box Hill, and plan soon to go to America.

When they return for the regular Summer season a magnificent new house will be ready for them in Grosvenor square. Unlimited money will be set aside for a campaign to conquer the exclusives of that neighborhood and May-fair. Heretofore Alfred has contented himself with merely crossing the Atlantic a few times annually when important sporting events offered sufficient entertainment. But now his several plans include securing a gorgeously fitted steam yacht on which he can take parties for a brief sortie as well as cruises in the mid-London season, thus breaking the monotony of dinner, balls and other affairs prescribed by court.

An All-Year-Round Campaign.

In the Winter, when the season begins to lag, there are the Riviera, the Mediterranean and Egypt, for all of which a yacht is a handy thing to have around. He is now endeavoring to secure a boat that will do for the coming season and then will give an order to build one which he is said will be the finest ever launched.

But this is not all. Alfred knows how this game must be played, even if he has been out of training for a while. There will be the Autumn shooting season in Scotland, where he and his bride are said to be negotiating for a large house in the Lowlands, where there is already a fine old castle—all that is needed being new plumbing and a few repairs to accommodate the usual size of the Fall house party.

Then there is to be a dainty chalet near St. Moritz, where one may escape from the fear of getting overweight on account of the luxuries of Cairo brings a variety for Winter Alpine sports.

May Modify "Court Rules."

Ambitious Americans who are looking forward to presentation at King George's Court during the coming season will be alarmed at a proposed modification of the conditions of presentation to be made for the purpose of reducing the list which shows signs of becoming unwieldy. A somewhat notable precedent was thus the presentation of women of foreign birth, not married to British subjects, who are restricted to those whose male relatives hold some official or diplomatic position in this country.

This is a direct blow at those Americans who travel to Europe at the beginning of the season, with the express purpose of being presented at Court. Queen Mary does not view this annual American invasion with favor, and she it was who first made the original suggestion for limiting it. King George also is determined to cut the number of presentations at any "Court" shall not exceed one thousand. Owing to American applications the Lord Chamberlain's office is already flooded with applications for presentation, only a small proportion of which can ever be successful.

The holding a fifth or supplementary court is being considered, the final decision being left over until the King returns. It is also proposed to hold one court annually in Edinburgh at which Dublin respectively, where Scotch and Irish ladies could be presented.

Mrs. West's New Scheme.

Mrs. George Cornwallis West, who was Miss Jerome of New York and who was prominent in organizing a pageant of Shakespeare ball at coronation time is now busy with arrangements for a great Shakespearean exhibition to be held at Olympia in London. The ultimate object of the show will be the, same as the ball, namely to raise money for a new Shakespearean theatre, so as to mark the Shakespearean tercentenary of 1916.

The exposition is to be called Shakespeare's England, and will aim to show the illusion of actually living in Elizabethan times. There will be reproductions of famous buildings and dwellings of the period, including of course Shakespeare's birthplace and other features of Stratford-on-Avon, where will also be a reproduction on the original scale of the old Globe Theatre in London where Shakespeare plays were originally produced, the author himself taking small roles.

A series of old Elizabethan plays will be acted on this historic stage, while sports and pastime of England will be revived.

Mrs. West will see to it that the social side is not neglected, and various carnivals and concerts will form an important feature of the program of the season, which is to last from May to September.

A wedding of interest to Americans will take place next April in London, when Miss Frances Osborne weds Victor Hide. Miss Osborne, who is a cousin of the late beauty and accomplishments, is a daughter of Mrs. McKinley Osborne and a relative of the late President McKinley. Mrs. Osborne's home in Queen's gate was for many years a social centre for Americans in London. She recently moved to a larger house in Kensington court, where the wedding reception is to be held.

The ceremony will take place at St. Margaret's, Westminster. The bridegroom is a grandson of Sir Walter Gilbey, with a magnificent seat, Elsphat Hall, in Essex. The couple will spend the honeymoon in France and then live in Albion street, Hyde Park.

MRS. SETH FRENCH A COURT HABITUE

Her Presentation at Berlin Winds Up Record Including Most of Europe's Capitals.

BY MARQUIS DE CASTELLANE.

Special Cable to Sunday Americans.

PARIS, January 20.—This year makes Mrs. Seth Barton French of Paris one of the most court-presented women of all Americans residing abroad, or, perhaps, anywhere. Mrs. French, widow of the late Morgan G. Bulkley, banking partner, daughter of Judge and Mrs. Walker Fearn, now Mrs. Arthur Inkersley and alleged fiancee of J. J. Van Alen, attended the Berlin court covered with lace and a court mantle covered with cloth of gold. Mrs. French had already been presented at the courts of Italy, Greece, Roumania, Servia and Russia.

Many Pan-Americans participated in the "Parade Court" of the Emperor and Empress—a march past where the participants are subjected to the critical eye of the court and its guests—among them being Countess Louis De Gontaut Biron, Miss Nancy Leishmann and Mr. and Mrs. Jack Leishmann. These were supported by Miss Gladys Waterous of Morristown, N. J.; Miss Devereux of Cleveland, Mrs. Henry Wood of Baltimore, Mr. and Mrs. Price Collier of New York and the Baroness Von Schlotheim, a daughter of the late General and Mrs. Clinton Paine of Baltimore.

Mrs. Wood Presented.

American university life was represented by the presentation of Mrs. Wood, wife of this year's "exchange professor." New officials, Second Secretary Willing Spencer of Philadelphia and Captain Nicholack, naval attache, were presented as a matter of course. Lady Robert Haddeid of United States Attorney-General Wickersham, being an English subject, was presented by the British Ambassador in order to qualify for the presentation. Ambassador and Mrs. Leishmann were present at the official reception on the 18th. The presentation of Mrs. Leishmann to the Empress took place six days before. Court etiquette demanded this before she could present her long list of Americans.

The German court is pleased because the Leishmanns have completely severed their connection with Paris.

Raspberry Parties.

The Hon. Lady Plunkett, a distinguished Paris-American, has started the new amusement of holding a raspberry package party in Winter near Lausanne. Lady Plunkett is a daughter of the late Charles W. Morgan of Philadelphia and a widow of Francis Plunkett, formerly British Minister to Belgium, Sweden and Japan.

The season is quite at Lausanne that Lady Plunkett organized a party of Americans who scoured the countryside for raspberries. It is a unique amusement in mid-winter. Lady Plunkett was assisted in her raspberry party by her two daughters, Countess Gyldenstolpe, wife of the Swedish Minister to Paris, and Miss Pinsent. Other Americans in the party were Mr. and Mrs. Franklin J. Smith of Chicago, Mrs. George Smith of Kansas City, Mrs. J. H. Brooks of Philadelphia, Mrs. E. Sinclair of Nashville and R. W. Knox of New York.

Young Count von Bath of Frankfort will be sent over next Fall to strengthen the staff of the German Embassy at Washington. He is a great friend of the Depews, especially of Chauncey, and will go to Berlin, Jr. He is tall, good-looking, unmarried, and has already made a hit with society on his face and rides well. During a recent visit to Paris he was known to have paid particular attention to Miss Patricia Rodd, daughter of Lieutenant Rodd, Baron of Los Angeles, but the King of Spain's young cousin, Prince Ferdinand, cut out the young German.

ARGYLL WRITES OPERA.

London Awaits Production with Eager Speculation.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—The Duke of Argyll has London thrilled with keen anticipation and eager speculation over the production of "Iloun and Tera," an opera for which he has written the libretto. The piece is based upon ancient Irish history and legend, and Carthage furnishing the scene of its romantic love story.

CROWN PRINCE IS AGAIN IN TROUBLE

Ebullient Young Man Goes Skiing Through Berlin Park —Ragged by the Kaiser.

BY COUNT VON ELPHBERG.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

BERLIN, Jan. 20.—The arrest of two New Yorkers, Mrs. Violet Scott and Mrs. Edith Horner, on remarkable charges of fraud and quackery, has disclosed the fact that for some considerable time these two women, calaiming to be in direct communication with the unseen world, have been amassing profits of $50,000 a year, their victims being foolish enough to believe them when they professed gifts of sending messages to or receiving messages from heaven or hell. They also claimed to intervene between their clients and God or Satan.

They borrowed money to squander, promising supernatural benefits in return; they charged exorbitant fees for sending messages to dead relatives, and were handsomely remunerated for attending sick persons for whom they pretended to secure aid from the spirit world. Over one thousand victims have been found to testify against them at the trial, which will take place in March.

Prince Again Punished.

The German Crown Prince's impetuosity has again incensed his imperial father and a further dose of chastisement has been administered to the royal delinquent. On his recent visit to Berlin his first appearance since the incident in the Imperial legislature, he dashed wildly through the Tiergarten Park in the centre of Berlin on two skees drawn by the fastest horses in his stable. He wore a woolen cap, jersey, breeches and gaiters and his career through the crowded park caused consternation to many pedestrians and brought shrieks of terror from dozens of little children playing in the snow.

Another step from the path of direct propriety was taken when he delivered a statement to the press for his behavior in the Reichstag was not a demonstration against England, but against a certain German foreign policy. In view of the fact that the German foreign policy in the last instance is conducted by the Kaiser himself, this was regarded as improper for the Crown Prince.

This will keep through the park, in conjunction with his indiscreet utterances, is alleged to have brought His Royal Highness a very severe reprimand and orders from the Kaiser to return at once to his military duties at the dull provincial town of Danzig.

Kaiser Isn't Worried.

The Kaiser does not appear to attach any significance to the doom which is predicted for Germany this year, but it is alleged he has set 1916 as the date of Germany's approaching clash with England. In conversation with a number of prominent shipping magnates the Kaiser is reported to have said:

"When I've obtained all that I want in the way of battleships and some men for the army, and then will be ready for the strike at England."

Although this alleged imperial utterance has raised excited comments in all political, military, naval and official circles into which it has entered, anxiety to a certain extent is assuaged by the knowledge that four years must elapse before the crisis come.

The Morgenpost will publish to-morrow dispatch from St. Petersburg describing a hunger strike of 100 political prisoners incarcerated at Eskoff, in Russia, not far from the German frontier. The political prisoners have determined to refuse all food owing to the barbarous treatment meted out to them by the wardens. Up to the present these cruel officials have flogged three prisoners to the point of death and the other ninety-seven will be similarly treated, unless the hunger strike is speedily terminated.

Fifty-seven Socialists have been sentenced at Posen to terms of imprisonment amounting to 279 years with hard labor. They were accused of irresponsible agitation.

MR. HAMMERSTEIN WINS NEW ALLIES

Duke of Westminster's Reported Entanglement Stirs Royal Circles.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—Despite the rumors of divorce proceedings involving the Duke of Westminster, the brilliant Duchess of Westminster is tremendously active in smart doings, especially in private theatricals. She scored cleverly in the title role of "Scaramouche," presented with other playlets, in the library of Eaton Hall, in aid of Chester charities and the Grosvenor Hospital. Part of her costume requirements as Scaramouche was to have a generous hole in the toe of one stocking. During the act the Duchess removed the shoe covering of the dilapidated stocking, displaying to the audience her pink and aristocratic toes peeping coyly from out the aforesaid gap. To add to the striking effect, the Duchess placed the shoeless foot on a chair, from which pedestal the titled toes were all the more visible.

Rumors of Divorce.

The aplomb with which the Duchess holds the society limelight is regarded as all the more striking, in view of the divorce rumors now associating with the Duke.

Persons declaring themselves accurately informed say that Colonel Moncton, the composer and husband of Gertie Millar, the stage beauty, has filed or is to file divorce papers, also that the Duke of Westminster is mentioned in the case. The Duchess, however, fails to let these reports diminish her society activities.

The Duchess of Sutherland, who is never long out of the public eye, is now causing much whispering in clubs and among the gossips. Her artistic temperament has led her to form a friendship for Mlle. Trouvanova, a beautiful Polish dancer, who is playing the Nun in Reinhardt's production of "The Miracle" at the Olympia.

Duchess' Friday Nights.

The Duchess has been to the Olympia several times and gave a big luncheon recently at Stafford House, her town residence, in the guests of honor were Reinhardt and the dancer. She also gave a very smart supper party one night this week, when all the society people in town were asked to meet Trouvanova, who performed dances in very chilly costumes in the small hours of the morning.

The invitations were not accepted as freely as usual, owing to the fact that many swagger have retired to their country seats for the week-end. The Friday Nights last season when Maxine, the dancer from the Cafe de la Paris and now in New York, executed with a few others, mabled dances which from their hair to their

WALTZ CAPTURES LONDON.

Everybody in Big City Dancing or Whistling It.

LONDON, Jan. 20—

The waltz, the waltz, the Viennese waltz. I think you know the tune from the Blue.

This is the haunting refrain of the new waltz, which has come to London and set everybody humming. It is Herr Leo Fall's latest triumph. "The Eternal Waltz," which is making the audience sway to its fascinating rhythm at the Hippodrome.

NEW WINTER SPORT.

Tobogg-Cycling Has Become Popular at Interlaken.

INTERLAKEN, Jan. 20.—A new form of Winter sport has this season made its appearance and has rapidly become popular. It might be termed tobogg-cycling, the sportsman rolling down an ordinary toboggan run on a machine resembling a bicycle but furnished with runners instead of wheels.

MRS. LEEDS STARTS ON TRIP OF ROMANCE

Leaves Naples at Hostess on Yacht With a Party of Notabilities.

ONE IS LORD FALCONER

Unsuccessful Wooer of Mrs. Chapman Expected to Have Better Luck This Time.

By PAUL PIERRE RIGNAUX.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, Jan. 20.—An interesting party of English and American personages full of matrimonial possibilities left Naples yesterday for a yachting tour. Some of them have just passed through Paris, where they purchased essentials and luxuries for a long voyage. Of them were the Duke and Duchess of Manchester and Lord Falconer, son of the Earl of Kintore.

This is the same Lord Falconer whose good looks attracted the "ten-million-dollar widow" before she became Mrs. Phillip Van Valkenburg of New York, and who, through his mountain of debts, frightened off the former Mrs. William Hay Chapman. I can state upon excellent authority that these debts have no such terrors for another well-known American, Mrs. William B. Leeds. Lord Lascelles and that great traveller, Lady Sarah Wilson, will be valuable members of this fashionable yachting party. Mrs. Leeds will be the hostess. She has chartered the Semiramis from young Lord Anglesea. The yacht belonged originally to Anthony Drexel, and was known as the Margherita.

Trip to Last Four Months.

The trip will last four months, during which time the party will visit India, Ceylon, Singapore, China, Japan and the Philippines. The original intention was to go to the Durbar, but business detained Mrs. Leeds in New York. The Earl of Kintore has been in Paris betting two to one that his son will capture a rich American widow this time.

"We are going to Egypt for the Winter and then back to Newport," said Mrs. Peter Martin of San Francisco to the International News Service correspondent.

Stately and sweet-voiced, Mrs. Martin told of her future plans in order to refute a rumor to the effect that she had come to Paris to get a divorce. Mrs. Martin, who was formerly a Miss Oelrichs, sister of Charles Oelrichs and of the late Herman Oelrichs, was direct and emphatic in her denial.

"Why," she said, "my husband is coming over soon by the Olympic, my brother has just gone back, my little boy is here, and my mother, Mrs. Havermayer, found these comfortable apartments for me. So you see we are rather a united family."

Mrs. Martin's Georgeous Suite.

Mrs. Martin is living in a gorgeous suite in the Hotel Beau Site, formerly occupied by Sir Robert Peel and recently by Governor and Mrs. Sprague of Rhode Island.

"When you mentioned the International News Service," she said, "I thought you had come to question or inform me about something rare and more terrible than divorce, for it was the International News Service which gave me the first news of the San Francisco fire and informed me of the destruction of our property. Divorce is so common nowadays that it should cease to be news. At all events we are quiet people and have no intention of increasing the number of irreconcilables.

"I like to go to Egypt and to tap its ancient civilization. Talking about the Pharaohs and Ramses II, gives one a learned air, and there is a certain enjoyment in rolling off these words trippingly from the tongue. A course of Egyptology is a good preparation for the frivolities of Newport."

Postleys in More Trouble.

An animated correspondence has been passing between Paris and Berlin involving Mrs. Clarence Postley, her daughter, Elsie Postley, and several high-placed officials at the Kaiser's court. It is likely the recriminations that Mrs. Postley will not make a visit to Rome this Winter.

Mrs. Postley's absence from the Eternal City will be regretted, as she has been very extended from restoring ruined churches to their original splendor. Under the care of Mrs. Bartlett of New York, who received the Order of Merit from Leo XIII, Postley, thus enabling her to marry an Italian prince. This is a Vatican etiquette, though causing annoyance to Mrs. Postley, amongst the Cardinal Merry Del Val, as did the Roosevelts and Richards of Mrs. Postley's philanthropies might have been expected to do, as she says she has now three families to support, and her income is only $800,000 a year.

"GOLDEN NITROGEN."

Tests Delight Scientists of Imperial College of Science.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—The wondrous beauty of "golden nitrogen" has been displayed by Professor R. J. Strutt at the Imperial College of Science, South Kensington.

Professor Strutt is one of the wizards of the day when it comes to chemistry. He covered that when an electric discharge is made in nitrogen gas the nitrogen retains its luminosity for a considerable time after passed away from the action of the electric current, the gas glowing with golden light.

Then the wonder of golden nitrogen was displayed. The gas was pumped out of a portion of the narrow tube into the larger tube, and when the connection with the small tube was filled with whirling, golden gas there was made a most beautiful and wonderful spectacles the laboratory has ever produced.

PLAY STAGGERS ACTORS.

Antoine's "The Caduceus" Is Withdrawn in Paris.

PARIS, Jan. 20.—"You know I enjoy fights," said Antoine to Baron Henri de Rothschild, and he adds in substance: "Give me your new play, I will bring it out, and if there is a row over it, so much the better." The new play by Antoine has a significant title, "The Caduceus," when it is remembered that the author is also a doctor. This piece was to have been performed shortly at the Vaudeville, and the Baron read it to the company of that theatre the other day. In scene he have staggered the actors. At any rate, that evening, Baron Henri wrote to the papers, saying that as his friend Antoine the vaudeville company as too violent, he had, with the directors' consent, withdrawn it, and would bring it out in book form.

NEPHEW OF HUMMEL BUYS A 'GOLD BRICK'

Theatre in Paris Was Packed With Deadheads, But He Makes It Pay.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, Jan. 20.—To marry the star performer and give presents of his kinds in the Boulevard de Clichy are the latest American methods introduced in Paris for the purpose of making a moribund theatre a success. These are the methods successfully adopted by Abraham Kaffenburg, a New York lawyer, who was connected with the Morse-Gelsheimn diverse case. Mr. Kaffenburg is a nephew of lawyer Abraham Hummel, who has proved extended from restoring ruined churches to their original splendor. Under the care of Mrs. Bartlett of New York, who received the Order of Merit from Leo XIII, Postley, thus enabling her to marry an Italian prince. This is a Vatican etiquette, though causing annoyance to Mrs. Postley, amongst the Cardinal Merry Del Val, as did the Roosevelts and Richards of Mrs. Postley's philanthropies might have been expected to do, as she says she has now three families to support, and her income is only $800,000 a year.

Barbarer of New York. Under their management the Boulevard Clichy theatre was anything but a success and they were losing money daily. Having heard that the lawyer wanted a theatre in Paris they prepared to sell him one and invited him to a performance.

During the day they sent men ringing bells all over Montmartre announcing a free performance in the evening. Men were also sent out all over the city offering presents as well as free passes. As a result the theatre was crowded when Kaffenburg arrived in company with some friends. Everything spelled success for the theatre. And so the lawyer put up a still price for it. The the sellers celebrated their victory at the Cafe de Paris and boasted all over town that they had sold him a gold brick.

Kaffenburg opened the theatre on christmas day, charging only a franc a seat. He bought a Christmas tree that reached to the ceiling and loaded it down with presents for the children. Each present cost him one cent, but the children and their parents packed the theatre. Next day Kaffenburg announced through the papers that he would give an opportunity to any artist of any nation to be heard who was willing to give free service. Among the latter was a beautiful girl from Bordeaux who offered her service.

She has made an tremendous hit and the theatre is packed every night and for four matinees weekly. Already enough money has been made to pay for the place. The actress is the wife of a rich wine merchant of Bordeaux. Tiring of a monotonous present life she ran away from her husband, the merchant, taking only the hat and clothes she had on. Now she is suing for divorce and when that is secured she will be married to Manager Kaffenburg.

EMMA EAMES, CECILIA SOLOIST.

The singers pictured above are to appear during the week in the productions at the Opera House, except Madame Emma Eames, who has been engaged as soloist at the second concert of the Cecilia Society in March.

Shall We Have Good Actors, or Great Singers, or Both, to Attain Most Effective Result in Grand Opera Productions?

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

ACTING or singing, which?

Both, you say, at once. But except in very rare cases it is impossible to find a great actor and a great singer in the same person. There is a growing tolerance for the poor singer who can act, and an augmenting impatience against the great singer who disregards the dramatic.

At the Boston Opera I have heard people declare recently that they prefer a certain artist who is a capable actor to another who is much greater as a singer.

There is more and more a disposition to regard opera as a drama with music rather than a musical entertainment with a dramatic background. Serious-minded composers have fostered and nursed this feeling until to-day it is actually forcing the old-style opera singer out of the business.

The music drama has effectually strangled the art of song, and the younger artists are in a great many cases conspicuous by their ignorance of the principles of singing. The popularity of the older operas is dying rather because of the lack of singers who can do them properly than because of any public appreciation of music drama.

A few more operas like "Pelleas et Melisande" and singers will find their occasion gone. There is an opera which is restrictive from beginning to end, and a fine voice is not even required to take a part in it acceptably.

All other kinds of opera is despised by the devotees of Debussy, and when they hear their way what will become of the musical stage?

I met a lady the other day who is very intelligent, very cultured and very fond of Debussy. When she found I was not she said:

"Oh, you prefer music hall stuff."

Just think of that. She classified Beethoven, Mozart, Wagner and Verdi as "music hall" composers.

I couldn't think of a retort then, but I have one now. If Beethoven and the rest are "music hall" composers, Debussy is a rag-time writer. Bah, and likewise pooh pooh.

* * *

After the "Caro Nome" in "Rigoletto" a few nights ago, the soprano bowed gratefully to the applause which she didn't particularly deserve.

During the intermission I never heard a man who, I believe, is a music instructor in one of the colleges, assailing the unfortunate singer more ferociously because she had acknowledged the presence of the audience by bowing.

"She is no artist or she would never step out of her character to bow to applause," he declared. "She ought to be driven from the operatic stage. In Paris or Berlin they would not permit such things."

Now isn't that disgusting? This woman was singing in an opera which is merely a string of melodies. The orchestra pauses at the end of each number. The composer intended to have every melody encored if possible, for that count success. All the great artists that I can remember have bowed after "caro nome." I am not familiar with Berlin where opera productions are said to be extremely bad, but in Paris they encore the old operas quite frequently.

Yet here was this individual in a fury because a soprano had not pretended to be a tragic queen, sweeping on through a great scene to a terrible climax.

Grand opera is ridiculous, because people do not live to the accompaniment of a big orchestra, nor do they express their feelings in song. Opera is an excuse for the display of fine voices. That is why it was invented. It wasn't intended as an orchestral entertainment, because the concert remained for the instrumental combinations and whole duty of the opera orchestra was to accompany the voices, nothing more.

The music drama is equally ridiculous, because if human beings do not express themselves in song, neither do they use recitative, and they do not go through life accompanied by a noisy and explanatory orchestra.

Music drama is just as absurd as grand opera, and don't you believe it isn't.

Both are founded on fallacy. The only music dramas that are execrable in the cold light of reason are those of Wagner, because his characters are gods and goddesses, who may be accompanied by an orchestra wherever they go for all we know.

Therefore laugh at the maniac who decries "Lucia" and praises "Thais," who sneers at "Traviata" and worships "Pelleas et Melisande."

No actor upon the opera stage has ever been comparable to the great artists of the spoken drama. The spoken drama is pictured life. The music drama is artificiality. Take Maurice Renaud, the greatest male singing actor. Any theatrical manager will tell you that he is too melodramatic, too exaggerated in all he does to be great in the spoken drama.

On the other hand no person who is occupied in singing great music can possibly pay much attention to acting. When Tetrazzini is enmeshed in the florid music of the "mad scene" and is still doubtful whether she can reach E flat, how can she bother about the dramatic side of that scene?

The music drama composers have realized this, and they do not write such music for their singing actors. Puccini for example, has kindly written simple music for his singers, music with never a trill or a turn. His heroes hold on to a note for two or three bars and then slide carefully down the scale. With little to bother them in the score they can turn their attention to the dramatic side of the work and achieve more success.

This would be very creditable if there were not a spoken drama in a very high state of development, but you see there is. What our composers have done is to degrade the voice for the sake of the action.

They have become infatuated with the possibilities of the orchestra, and in fooling with it they have neglected the finest instrument of all, the voice.

When I go to the theatre I demand fine acting, and I resent anything that destroys the illusion of reality.

At the opera, the presence of a big orchestra, a conspicuous and outrageous conductor, a prompter and an Italian chorus destroy any illusion that the appearance of the artists themselves would not obliterate.

The difference in price of three dollars between the playhouse and the opera house represents the desire of the public to hear music, not to witness acting. So, first and foremost, we demand singers at the opera. We do not listen to the impressarios who would like to substitute actors because they are cheaper. Nor do we care about the players of flute and double bass who despise singing with all the passion of devotees of instrumental music.

When taste is to be consulted, that of the professional musician is least important of all, because he does not contribute anything to the support of music, rather he gets his living from it.

I know of a man who is a fine violinist, but he hates all symphony orchestras, and when he plays alm arrangements of the old masters and fills the room with the scent of diverse perfumes. This gentleman disagrees with Donizetti and Verdi, but what of it?

So in grand opera let us have singers and let us have music that they can sing. Bring on your phenomenal voices and when you haven't got them, substitute acting singers, but don't try to make us believe that they are better worth hearing.

A Composers' Recital.

It is not often that Boston has an opportunity to hear even a unique recital as that which will be given in Jordan Hall on Saturday afternoon, at 5 o'clock. This is announced as a "Composers' Recital" and is for the purpose of introducing to the Boston musical public some of the compositions of such well-known local composers as Timothee Adamowski, F. S. Converse, Heinrich Gebhard, Henry Hadley, Arthur Shepherd, Gustav Strube and Mr. Ch. M. Loeffler.

MUCK COMES BACK

By MORTON BIRGE

SING a song of Symphony, Muck is coming back,
Herr Direktor Muck of genius rare.
We get Muck and, also note, get the royal Deutsches poet,
For they tried to keep him over there.

Look at all the classy jobs offered Dr. Muck,
Anything he wanted over home.
Any post he could command in the blessed Vaterland
If the Herr Direktor wouldn't roam.

Berliner and Viennese, Munich also ran,
All implored the Doctor not to go;
And the Emperor himself offered post and perks and pelf,
All the Deutsche love the Doctor so.

Sing a song of Symphony, Boston turns the trick,
Muck still boss our orchestra once more.
Spite of Emperor and all, Muck hears only Boston's call,
Back to Boston where he was before.

A MIDNIGHT MEAL WITH CONSTANTINO

Noted Senor Has a Hearty Appetite and His Cigars Are Really Immense.

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

Many years ago, when the editor was a small boy, he used to frequent a melodrama theatre, occupying a situation in addition in the front row of the gallery. As this post was calculated to getting attention an hour early he had time to study the iron curtain which was entitled "A Feast at the House of Lucullus."

It showed a party of decadent Romans lying on mattresses gorging themselves and watching preludes of Isadora Duncan and Maud Allan.

This picture ought to be labelled "A Feast at the House of Constantino," because that is what it was, only the family resemblance to the Lucullan affair is that it also was a gorge.

Florencio Constantino, wearing a soft gray hat, a raglan overcoat and a cane flecked upon his arrival me in the lobby of the Opera House. He was also wearing the Constantino smile. A volume might be written upon the smile of Constantino. It is a variety only to be found upon the faces of the successful. Caruso wears it. So does Tetrazzini. It is painted upon the faces of nearly all the Western millionaires who back about in the Waldorf-Astoria in New York.

The Smile of Tolerance.

It is a smile that makes envious people peevish, people who think the great should be unconscious of their greatness. It is a good-natured, if tolerant, expression. It implies tolerance for the other fellows who are not so good, and confidence in one's own superiority. Not being a try hero or an opponent of the dramatic in the Constantinian's smile winning sense, I found Constantino very "one of us."

"Come and have dinner with me," said Constantino, in good opera English.

All this happened yesterday afternoon. A great event took place in Constantino's rooms on Westland avenue. He used to live on Tremont street, but when his house was up the landlord wouldn't renew it. Not that he objected to Constantino. He liked him very much because he paid his rent promptly. But the other tenants in the block didn't like the sounds of revelry that came from the Venetian palace that was late as 4 a. m., the nights the tenor sang at the opera.

You see an opera singer operates at the opera on an empty stomach and, not having eaten all day Constantino usually wants a good dinner when he gets home about midnight. He is fond of company and finds plenty to eat with him. When the request was framed Constantino used to rush off the stage and start a poker game. For the benefit of the police we state that he doesn't do it any more.

Anyway the neighbors didn't like being kept up all night. Even the free opera arias they heard when the tenor was practicing during the day time didn't compensate for loss of sleep.

Constantino and His Staff.

So behold him on Westland avenue with his son Alexander, his bulldog Espinosphinx, his secretary, his valet and his cook.

"Welcome," says Constantino the host. "Come right in and sit down."

He seat ourselves at an attractive white table in an ordinary looking dining room. Constantino presides and beams around benevolently. On the little finger of his left hand is a diamond ring. If anybody else wore that diamond you would say glass, because it is on the ring finger of swollen. In Constantino we have confidence.

"Begin," says Constantino. Edgardo, his Martinique servant, enters, supported by a large platter of spaghetti, sets down in the middle of the table. It is a monstrous yellow platter, with white specks in it, and the spaghetti looks about as appetite ing as boiled glue. "Italian fare," says Constantino, "very delicious."

He fearlessly plunges a big ladle into the Constantinian mess and helps us. With equal courage I conveyed a forkful to my mouth and received a hero's reward. It wasn't half bad. Eaten in the Constantino manner, it is delicious.

Constantino now gave an imitation of a stoker on the Lusitania, a feint to be passed by the La Provinces of the French line, and the Italian rice disappeared very rapidly.

The tenor glenced at my plate with a twinkle in his eye.

"My friend," he said, "I think you no like Italian rice."

Protests were to vain; the tenor laughed and ordered the next course. This was a plate of sliced sausage of Italian and Spanish extraction with several saving flunks of ham, which I appropriated. For drinking there was also water and beer.

Constantino's appetite was still on the job and this course was thoroughly enjoyed.

"Now we shall have the roast chickens," said the tenor when the roast meat had been disposed of. Jehannon, the fat pastry cook, is said to hold the championship belt as a chicken roaster, but personally I could name him look as foolish as Jeffries.

About four good sized chickens cooked in French fashion, quartered and served on a piece of lettuce, were brought in. Constantino's eyes sparkled. "This is what you will like. In all countries the poulet is the most favorite meat. Edgardo, un pou de champagne."

With his chicken Constantino drinks champagne, not like a connoisseur, but ominously and with full appreciation of its cost, but gastronomically like a connoisseur to whom champagne is a daily occurrence and no cause for excitement.

Those Constantino Cigars.

There is no use in denying that the chicken was good, and Constantino had considerable success in refreshing of the platterful. When all was over our cause for complaint ceased.

Ever see one? They are about eight inches long, very thick and wrapped in tissue paper with the picture of Constantino upon them. They are made especially for him in Havana.

The conversation naturally turned upon matters musical, and inevitably upon the subject of opera. Apropos of nothing in particular I suspected of faking high notes he remarked:

"There are men posing as tenors who cannot sing a good note above an A. They bring out a fine full A as though they were accomplishing something and the audience thinks it is a real achievement.

"Now I sing whatever the score requires. Sometimes it says C sing C and not A or B flat or even B. In four or five years perhaps I may have to fake, but not now. I am suspected of faking high notes he remarked.

"A Good Job Is Better Than a Straight Front"

Mr. Nick Young Asks a Lady—a Very Large Lady in Fact—a Very Delicate Question, and Is Much Surprised to Find She's Rather Proud of Her Avoirdupois.

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

LET'S get right down to facts—cut out senseless preliminaries, tell the truth and stand by the consequences. Which, I must confess, takes real courage when you are face to face with the ungallant task of writing about a lady whose dimensions are so ample as to bar her from life insurance, lawn tennis and other frivolities that go with a slender waist and sound wind.

Perhaps you can imagine—if you have human emotions—my own doubtful feelings when I asked Mrs. Charles G. Craig if her figure was all her own or whether it was put on and taken off, like make-up, in the interest of the drama. It was a fool question, anyway. As Moynahan, the artist, said, it was none of my darned business.

But it had been reported by people interested in "The Country Boy" that Mrs. Craig had to keep fat to hold her job as the very funny Mrs. Bannan—or, rather, that if she lost her weight she would lose her job. In either case she was hired on a basis of pounds, ounces and drams, and had to live up to it. Without venturing too much into commonplace detail, it may be said that Mrs. Craig is living up to her contract in a manner most acceptable to her managers—likewise the public. I cannot supply any scientific reason why the interest of the drama demands women in quarter-ton sizes for lodging house keepers, but Mr. Henry B. Harris expects it in "The Country Boy"—which brings Mrs. Craig into the argument.

"Is she so terribly large?" Moynahan asked, after we had sent up our cards and were waiting for the verdict. "Maybe this is just a trick of the press agent to get us all worked up over the lady. I wouldn't put it beyond him."

Of course, the whole thing seemed unreasonable, but there was the solemn word of the man at the Park Theatre that Mrs. Craig just had to stay fat or be fined or fired, or something like that.

Word came from the depths of the hotel that Mrs. Craig would see us—only the call must be brief, for her daily hour at the gymnasium was approaching and she never permitted anything to interfere with her physical culture. So we hurried.

Yes, kind readers, Mrs. Craig is comfortably buxom. You might say she is well spread out. "Don't be bashful," she called cheerfully; "come on in and let's talk it over."

Then I asked the hateful question, inwardly praying that Mrs. Craig's good nature would not be ruffled by the impertinence.

"Is my figure my own? Young man, do you think I would wear this around with me if it hadn't grown on and couldn't be removed? Not that I am troubled about my figure, though I wish you would speak of it as weight—it seems less personal. You might say that my weight is my fortune, for it always guarantees me work at my profession, no matter how dull the times may be. There is always a demand for stout character women because they are so scarce. No, I wouldn't want to lose a pound—I rather enjoy things as they are. I may be the Lusitania of the profession, but I glory in it—it keeps my farm up in Canada going."

"But this awful predicament," I suggested; "this requirement of your contract that you must maintain a certain weight or lose your job. How do you feel about that?"

"Oh, pshaw," and her laughing answer smashed another good story into small bits. "There's nothing in it, that is, in a literal sense. Of course, Mr. Harris wants a properly developed woman for the role of Mrs. Bannan, and he wouldn't like it if I should fall away 100 pounds or more—doubtless I would then lose my job—but Mr. Harris knows that I couldn't get thin if I wanted to, which I don't.

"Why women are so afraid of a little weight on their bones I cannot understand. At my time of life—it's none of your business what the exact time is—a woman's health and ability to do things is more important than a smart figure. I am never sick, and my weight is a business asset that keeps me busy when other members of the profession are idle. It would be a serious thing for me to grow thin, not so much on account of my role in 'The Country Boy,' but because of its effect upon future engagements.

"Of course, I don't receive 'mash' notes any more, and I don't believe in late suppers anyway; so what would I gain with a new figure made in the latest model?"

Mrs. Craig threatened to dismiss us, but Moynahan, whose ways with the ladies are beyond understanding, persuaded her to let us follow on to the gymnasium, where rough work was to be done with the rowing machines and medicine balls. It was a merry party. I carried a gymnasium suit and Moynihan handled the umbrella.

"I'll confide to you now," said Mrs. Craig, "that I'm a regular picture in my gym suit." All of which came true.

It bothered us some to figure out why a woman so anxious to remain in the heavyweight class should take chances with gymnasium work. Perhaps she was trying to reduce and didn't want the scandal to get around. So I put the question squarely to her.

"Good Lord, man," she exclaimed, dropping a twenty-five pound dumb bell, and taking a fresh hitch in her —er—bloomers, "you can't expect me to stay so soft that I cannot walk. You know, I don't mind being fat, but I've got to get around, and this gymnasium work keeps me in condition. It's bad enough anyway, but if it were not for my daily exercise, I guess they'd have to carry me to the theatre."

Whereupon Mrs. Craig threw herself across one of those tantalizing gymnasium horses. It was a plain, hope-to-die straddle that she was negotiating on the apparatus, and we gasped. "Could you do it?" asked Moynahan. "It would wreck me," I confessed.

And still Mrs. Craig flitted about, chasing a medicine ball, dangling over the parallel bars and rowing four or five miles up the river in a machine tied to the wall. It was all the same to her. We grew red in the face, and perspired for her, but she kept cool and moved from machine to machine until she had nearly completed the available list. She was the most business like looking visitor in the gymnasium.

"It's great for the appetite," she explained, "and when the appetite is good, you don't have to worry about getting thin." There was material evidence before our eyes to prove that her appetite was well above par.

Safely buckled into her street clothes again, Mrs. Craig took us further into her confidence by explaining that while her surroundings in "The Country Boy" were exceptionally happy, her heart was really with black-face comedy. "This is the first role I have played in twelve years with a white face," she said. "I just love the colored mammy, and she is always my choice when I can find the opportunity to impersonate one. Everything else in character work seems tame and unreal to me, though I will concede that Mrs. Bannan is a lady of many comical qualities."

I suggested that doubtless she had played the fluffy, lovely girl in her early days on the stage. "You are wrong," she answered. "I have always done comedy character work. Please don't forget that even as a girl I was plump, and besides I wasn't in the business then.

"It is strange, but I never though I could act, and I probably never would have attempted it if my husband had not been taken seriously ill, which forced me to earn money to support both of us. Mr. Craig was an actor and I was around the theatre a great deal, but it always a marvel to me that men and women could work on the stage. I had been married to an actor seven years and never had the slightest inclination to take up the work. When I was forced to earn a living, I was given a small character part to play, and my success in it was a greater surprise to me than to anyone else. It didn't seem possible. Now it is so easy, that I wonder how it escaped me so long."

Our visit with Mrs. Craig convinced us that an actress may be both fat and happy—that excessive weight holds no terrors for the woman who takes a sunny view of life and who knows that a large waist is a guarantee of safe employment.

But could you honestly agree with Mrs. Craig that a good job is better than a straight front?

MARRIED LIFE THE THIRD YEAR - -

No 7—Helen's Letter to Warren Is Interrupted by a Call from His Sister, Carrie

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

WARREN had been gone five days now and each night Helen had written him a diary letter. Just before she went to bed she would write an account of the day's happenings, trivial or commonplace though they were.

She had received only two letters from him so far. The first just a short note from Buffalo and a longer letter from Chicago. The letter in the terse telegraphic style in which Warren always wrote was before her now.

—— Hotel,
Chicago, Jan. 11, '12.

Dear Helen:

Arrived here at 11:20. Train half an hour late. Went straight to Kohn & Rogers's offices. But Rogers was out of town. Won't be back till tomorrow. Will have to wait over to see him. Don't like to lose this day, but suppose it can't be helped.

Cold as blazes here. And windy—Jove, a regular gale all the time. Been seeing some of this town this afternoon. Looked up Jack Cartright and he took me to his home for dinner. He has a nice little wife and a couple of youngsters. Seems to be doing well out here.

Well, I must go to bed. Got a hard day before me tomorrow. This is a pretty cheerless hotel room. Bed, bureau, washstand, card of regulations on back of door—you know the type. And it's cold as Greenland. Two pipes of the radiator are lukewarm and the rest stone cold. When you try to turn on more heat it only sputters. Glad you put that sweater in. Couldn't sit in this room without it.

Some fellows are playing poker in the next room. Can hear the click of chips. Drummers. This is a commercial hotel, full of traveling men.

Well, good-night. Take care of yourself and Winifred.

As ever, WARREN.

Although Helen knew every word in this, she read it over once more. Then drew the paper and ink toward her and began her daily letter.

Monday evening.

Dear:

Your letter from Chicago came this morning, and oh, I was so glad to hear! Was so sorry you missed Mr. Rogers and had to stay over. I can see that cheerless little hotel room and can't bear to think of you staying all night in such places. But, of course, it will not be so cold in California, and as you will be there longer you will arrange for better accommodations.

Mrs. Stevens called this afternoon and took me out in her car for a little drive. I suppose it was good for me to get out and yet I haven't much heart for anything now while you're away. With the exception of the dinner at which I chaperoned Alice Brooks, this is the only time I've been anywhere since you left.

This morning I cleaned out your closet, took all the things down, washed the shelves and put on fresh paper. I found that pair of old fur-lined gloves you were looking for. I wish you had them with you now. But they are pretty much worn, so you had better get a new pair if you need them, as these will last only a little while.

I am wondering if that underwear you have with you is heavy enough. Perhaps you had better get some if you're going to be in poorly heated hotels. And that rough gray suit is heavier than the other one. I hope you wore that the day you were in Chicago.

Do take care of yourself, dear, and if you feel that you're getting a cold be sure to take some of your cough medicine. You have a bottle with you, and if it isn't enough you have the prescription. It's in that box with your papers.

Winifred is well. You ought to have seen her playing with the kitten this evening. She had it in her arms rocking back and forth, just as I rock her. I'm always afraid it will scratch her, although it seems to let her do almost anything she wants to with it.

I forgot to tell you that the man came to fix the kitchen sink Saturday. And the telephone bill came to-day—$6.75. Isn't that rather high? I'm sure we didn't have that many calls. Don't you think—

But just here the phone rang, making Helen start and blot the paper.

"Mr. and Mrs. Edwards are calling," announced the elevator boy.

Carrie and her husband! And they so rarely called!

"Ask them to come up," putting up the receiver and hurrying in to smooth her hair and then back to the sitting room to straighten thing around.

What was bringing them this evening? Occasionally Carrie called in the afternoon, but Helen couldn't remember when they had ever come in the evening. She ran to answer the door bell.

"I guess this is a surprise," said Carrie. "But we were in the neighborhood and I told Lawrence we ought to come over and see you for a moment"

"Why I'm so glad you did. Here, Lawrence, take this chair. Roy, here's a nice little stool for you. Let me take your things, Carrie."

"Oh, no, we're only going to stay a moment. Roy should be in bed now. Have you heard from Warren?"

"Yes, I got a leter from Chicago to-day. He had to stay there over night to see Mr. Rogers."

"How's Winifred?" asked Lawrence.

"Oh, she's well; she's asleep now or I'd bring her in."

"Oh, no, don't awaken her. Come here, Roy! What are you doing?"

Roy was on his knees trying to get Pussy Purrmew from under the couch.

Although Carrie had been much more friendly and gracious since the final Christmas incident, still Helen was never quite comfortable when with her. She felt her critical gaze was everywhere and that she was making mental notes for future comment. Lawrence, Helen would have liked very much better, had he not been so completely under the dominance of his wife.

"Oh, Roy, don't play so roughly with the kitten," warned Helen, as she saw Pussy Purrmew struggling to get out of his grasp. "Oh, don't, you'll hurt her!"

"Oh, cats aren't easily hurt," said Carrie, complacently, watching Pussy Purrmew's struggles unmoved.

"Oh, don't — DON'T Roy! You mustn't pinch her tail!" But just as Helen started forward to rescue it, the kitten, with a little hiss, gave Roy a sharp scratch on the hand.

He immediately set up a howl, while the kitten flew into the next room.

"Oh, that VICIOUS cat!" cried Carrie, excitedly, taking Roy in her arms, who only howled the louder. "Why do you keep such an ill-tempered animal?"

"Why Pussy Purrmew isn't ill-tempered," said Helen, secretly glad that Roy had for once gotten what he deserved. "Any kitten will scratch if it's tormented."

"Tormented?" angrily. "Roy was only playing with it. He wouldn't torment anything. It's a nasty, vicious cat! You should get rid of it at once! I'll tell Warren so when he comes back."

"Oh, now Carrie," said Lawrence, soothingly, "perhaps Roy was a bit rough."

But Carrie was not to be pacified. She was thoroughly incensed, not only because Roy had been scratched, but at what she felt was Helen's indifference.

"You mustn't mind Carrie," murmured Lawrence, apologetically, as they were leaving. "She always gets nervous when Roy cries."

"I'm not nervous at all," said Carrie lofty, overhearing him, "but naturally I don't like to have Roy bitten by a vicious cat."

When they had gone Helen went back to her letter. The old feeling of antagonism which Carrie almost always aroused in her was very strong. She wondered why they were so antagonistic—why Carrie could never call without something unpleasant happening?

Her first impulse was to write Warren an account of the call.

"Carrie and Lawrence have just been here," she wrote. "And something unpleasant had to happen—it seems that it always does when she comes. Roy was tormenting Pussy Purrmew and she scratched him—very justly I thought. But Carrie was furious, she said—"

Here Helen paused. Why was she writing this to Warren? What was to be gained by reciting an unpleasant incident? She tore up this page and wrote again.

"Carrie and Lawrence have just been here. They were in the neighborhood and came in to see how I was getting along. They asked after you and sent their love.

I am marking off another day on the calendar—six days now, but it seems a month. I try to keep very busy so I will not miss you too much. To-morrow I'm going to clean out the pantry—those top shelves are dreadful. Delia has a way of putting everything up there. Then Wednesday I want to take down the dining-room curtains. The laundry almost ruined them last time and now I'm going to help Delia do them up here.

So you see I am keeping very busy—so I won't have too much time to think of you. Take care of yourself dear—the best of care. And come back soon—very soon to Your wife—Helen.
